A Nato raid chemicals plant is threatening the Serb capital, reports Tom Walker in Belgrade

AN ecological disaster ap-peared to be unfolding yesterday after Nato deliberately bombed a combined petro-chemicals, fertiliser and refinery complex on the banks of the Danube in the northern outskirts of Belgrade.

A series of detonations that shook the whole city early yesterday sent a deeply toxic cloud of smoke and gases hundreds of feet into the night sky. in the opaque dawn the choking cloud could be seen spreading over the entire northern

Among the deadly cocktail of chemicals billowing over hundreds of thousands of homes were the nerve gas phosgene, chlorine and hydrochloric acid. As workers at the industrial complex in Pancevo panicked, they decided to release tons of ether dichloride, a powerful carcinogen, into the Danube, rather than risk seeing it blown up.

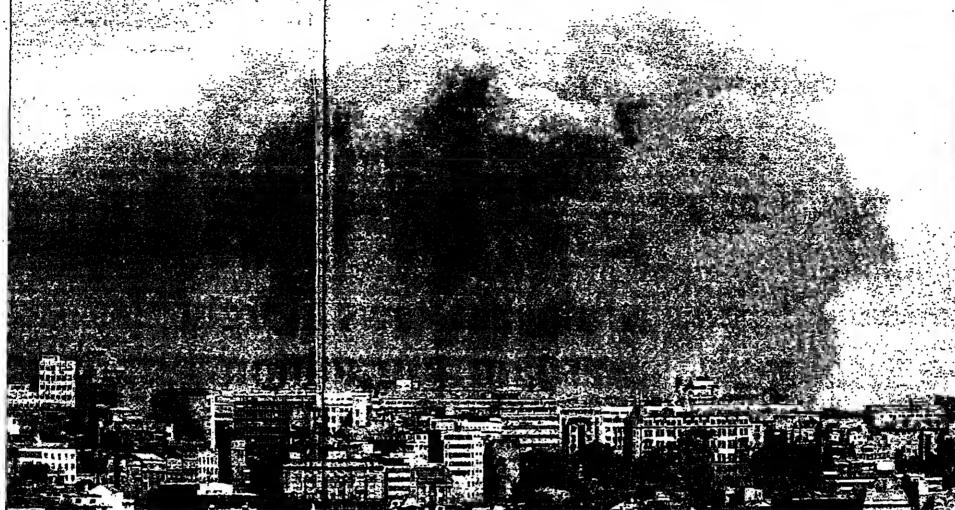

At least three missile strikes left large areas of the plant crippled and oil and petrol from the damaged refinery area also coursed into the river, forming slicks up to 12 miles long. Temperatures inside the collapsing plant were said to have risen to over

Nato said that the oil refinery and chemicals complex had been destroyed by a heavy air attack in the early hours of yesterday. Asked about the hazard from chemical smoke, Nato said there was a lot more smoke coming from burning villages in Kosovo". A towering cloud of toxic gases looms over Belgrade after warplanes, on the 25th night of the Nato onslaught, hit a petrochemicals plant in the northern outskirts of the city

At least 50 residents of Pan-cevo were reported suffering from nerve gas poisoning and the Health Ministry was struggling to find gas masks to dis-tribute in the suburb and surrounding areas. In the meantime, residents were told to breathe through scarves soaked in sodium bicarbonate as a precaution against showers of nitric acid.

Thirteen hours after the first of the explosions, the Yugoslav Army took journalists to Pancevo just as a thunderstorm broke over the stricken complex. Bolts of lightning shot be-hind the flames licking the charcoal sky in almost apoca-

Brown orders audit of war costs

BY ROLAND WATSON POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

GORDON BROWN bas ordered a running audit of the 'fantastically uncertain" cost of the conflict in Kosovo amid fears that it could exhaust the Treasury reserves set aside for Teams of officials from four government departments are working full-time on estimates of the final total and its impact on the public account. Although the Treasury insists that all the scenarios investigated remain within the Government's public spending arithmetic, there are concerns that a prolonged campaign may force a rethink.

Defence analysts say the war has so far cost Britain an extra £50 million on lop of the Ministry of Defence's day-to-day running costs.

Paul Beaver, a spokesman for Jane's Defence, said that the cost was currently running al about £2 million a day, although that would soon rise towards £3 million as more troops and equipment were moved to the gion. "They certainly weren't planning on having this long a war and the costs will only accelerate," he said.

Those estimates relate pure ly to the military action and do not take into account Britain's role in the current humanitarian effort. Government officials concede that if Britain does start to take in large numbers of refugees from the region, the cost to the Exchequer will rocket.

There is £1.2 billion in this year's contingency fund, but as one Treasury official stated, even in peacetime "the reserves have a tendency to be spent". The three-month Gulf War cost Britain £2.35 billion.

Brixton bomber could strike again, police warn

By STEWART TENDLER AND MICHAEL PATERSON

POLICE yesterday gave warning that the "vicious and reckless" criminal behind the nailbomb attack on a South London market could strike again. Senior police and ministers said that the bomber may have wanted to kill rather than maim his victims, and Scotland Yard has urged com-panies and shops throughout London to ensure that their security cameras are working in anticipation of another attack.

Police were given no warning of the bomb, which was left in a busy market in Brixon Saturday afternoon, and no-one has claimed responsibility. The Yard has so far been unable to suggest a motive for the attack. Two of the 40 victims treated in hospital have serious eye injuries, and a 23-month-old boy underwent an operation to remove a four-inch nail from his head. Police, led by Detective Inspector Maureen Boyle, are studying film from security cameras around the market in Brixton Road and Electric Avenue for pictures of a blond man who witnesses say left the device in a bag about 5.20pm. The Yard has appealed for more footage from carneras in the area and urged witnesses to come forward.

Jack Straw, the Home Secretary, said that the bombing was as "an outrageous act".

Kate Hoey, the Home Office minister with responsibility for the police and the Yard, said that police had ruled out Irish terrorists, and she dismissed any links to the war in the Balkans. She said it was possible, though unlikely, that the attack was racially motivated. Miss Hoey, who is also a ocal MP, added: "We have got to find out who did it. Because someone is prepared to do that on a Saturday afternoon in Brixton, until we find that erson, then it really is a very sturbing situation." continued on page 5, col 8

A 28-YEAR-OLD Kenyan mother yesterday bad the biggest payday for a single event in women's athletics history when she controver-stally earned £210,000 for winning the Flora London Marathon.

Joyce Chepchumba's victory in the women's race, in a time of 2hrs 23mins 22secs, came on a day when a record 31,582 runners started the 19th annual race, raising an estimated £15 million for charity. Abdelkader El Mouaziz, aged 30, of Morocco. won the men's event in 2hrs 7mins 57secs.

Back welfare state, Lilley to tell Tories tell the Conservative Party to abandon the "Holy Grail" of trying to use free-market economics to run Britain's schools and hospitals.

Mr Lilley, the Tories' deputy leader, will say that the party must turn its back on Thatcherite zeal, and support education and health services as publicly run and publicly funded systems. He will say the party's "Achilles' heel" is that people don't trust the Tories to run public services because they believe the party wants to privatise them.

In a message that will alarm ome quarters of the party, Mr Lilley will say: "Conservatives must renew public confidence fare state just as Rab Butler [the former Cabinet minister] did. But we will only do so if we accept that the free market has only a limited role in im-proving public services like health, education and welfare."

He will insist that the party remains the party of the free market. "But we also have to recognise the limits of the free market." He will pledge the Tories to funding the NHS with public money, ruling out any large-scale switch to a system of private insurance. Mr Lilley's address, fully endorsed by Mr Hague, will come when he delivers the But-

Arms row will kill peace deal, warns Adams

By MARTIN FLETCHER, CHIEF IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

GERRY ADAMS gave a warn- and Irish Governments did ing yesterday that, if London and Dublin insisted on IRA disarmament before admitting Sinn Fein to an executive, the Good Friday peace accord

Mr Adams's warning, his bleakest yet, came on the eve of today's crucial talks at Downing Street. Government sources said that, unless Sinn Fein and the Unionists displayed flexibility on decommissioning, "parking" the accord over the summer would become a "very real option".

Such a move could also involve suspending key provisions, such as prisoner releases and the salaries of Northern Ireland's new assembly.

As the crisis deepened, Mr Adams, Sinn Fein's president. told state television in Dublin that the accord was in "freefall" and that failure to establish the executive would be a nol reject Unionist demands for IRA decommissioning "then the agreement is dead".

Government sources acknowledged the perils of sus-pending the accord until the autumn. It could easily be wrecked by a summer of damaging election results, contentious marches and acts of violence. But unless the decommissioning issue is resolved by the end of the month, there will be little choice because the alternatives are even worse.

One would involve Mo

Mowlam, the Northern Ireland Secretary, triggering the mechanism for establishing an executive that included Sinn Fein. Without some IRA disarmament, the Unionists would walk away and David Trimble would probably resign as First Minister.

The other would involve Sinn Fein's exclusion from the executive. John Hume's nation-

DAVID TRIMBLE, North-ern Ireland's First Mioister, may become the first Ulster Unionist Party leader to meet the Pope (Martio Fletcher writes). The mave would enbance his reputatioo as a statesman, but enrage many fellow Orangemen.

If the demaods of the peace process permit, he ioteods to ccept an invitation from Mikhail Gorbachev, the former Soviet President, to a two-day seminar for Nobel Peace laureates in Rome that would include a reception to the Vatican on Wednesday. "I wouldn't be the first Orangeman to meet a Pope." Mr Trimble said yesterday, but such a meeting would anger many members of the of the Orange Order's rules is that "you should not couote-ny of popish worship". Some hardliners sooght to discipline Mr Trimble and Dennis Rogan, the UUP's chairman, after they attended a funeral Mass in Boncrana, Co Donegal, for three victims last Aogust's Omagh bomb. 10 September 1997 Mr Trimble hroke another taboo by meeting Archbishop Sean Brady, leader of the Roman Catholie Chorch in Ireland.

Politically. Wednesday's meeting with the Pope would help Mr Trimble by demonstratiog his willingness to reach out at a time when Unionists and Sinn Fein are both determined that the others chould be blowed for the er should be blamed for the peace process deadlock.

alist Social Democratie and Labour Party would never agree to that, and to do so would virtually invite the IRA to break its ceasefire.

Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern, the Irish Prime Minister, will hold separate meet-ings with Mr Trimble's Ulster Unionist Party, the SDLP and Sinn Fein at No 10 this after-

Sinn Fein has rejected the Prime Ministers' April 1 Hillsborough declaration, which sought to remove all connotations of surrender from the act of decommissioning. The two men will make no further proposals, but will be waiting to hear whether the parties offer any new ideas of their own or display any will-ingness to move beyond their entrenched positions.

Tomorrow will be fairly crucial. It will be a major step down the road of assessing where the parties are," said one senior official. "If all they do is reiterate that the other has to move first, [suspension] becomes a very real option."

A decision on whether, and how, to "park" the process would have to be taken by late April. "Nobody is under any illusion that it's an easy option . . . To some extent we lose control of events," the official

The Rev Ian Paisley is planning to turn June's European elections into a second referendum on the accord and polls suggest a majority of Unionists would now vote against. The Orange Order's annual July 4 Drumcree parade will further inflame the Province and halting prisoner releases would enrage the IRA.

But the official insisted the peace process could survive. There was "a history of it being 'parked' at various stages and surviving. Inevitably, as we go further forward, the stakes become higher, but I think it's inevitable we will come back because no one has a viable alternative and every-one wishes to make it work."

Disputes culture grows

An American-style compensation culture is taking over in Britain which may be costing nearly £7 billion a year in payouts and legal fees (Frances Gibb writes). A report by the Centre for Policy Studies says that more people are turning to the law to resolve disputes with buge cash consequences.

Reforms to the way civil disputes are settled in the courts, which take effect oext Monday, will exacerbate the problem because more people will have access to the courts, it argues. Frank Foredi, a reader in sociology at Keot University and the report's author, estimates that on the lowest likely fig-ures the public sector spends about £1.2 billion on compensa-tion payments and the private sector about £1.2 billion.

Teachers call for Woodhead inquiry

By ROLAND WATSON POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

ATTEMPTS by David Blunkett to put an end to damaging speculation about the future of Chris Woodhead appeared to have failed yesterday when teachers' leaders called for a criminal investigation into the Government's beleaguered Chief Inspector of Schools.

David Hart, the general secretary of the National Association of Head Teachers, said that the Director of Public Prosecutions should investigate whether Mr Woodhead had lied under oath about an affair that he was alleged to have had with a sixth-former more than 20 years ago. He added that the police should examine sworn statements given to Mr Blunkett, the Education Secretary, by Mr Woodhead and his former lover, Amanda Johnston, saying that their affair began after they had left Gordano School, near Bristol.

"My members do not believe there has been a proper investigation into whether Chris Woodhead has lied in public and in a sworn affidavid to save his job," Mr Hart

Mr Blunkett said last week that the claims ranged against Mr Woodhead were unsubstantiated and did not call into question his suitability for the job. but Mr Hart said that he intended to pursue the matter and would recommend such a course of action to his executive on Thursday.

Winning woman nets $350,000 purse

JUST who is the fastest female marathon runner on earth? The battle really begins after the exhausted athletes have passed through the finishing post.

The Kenyan runner Joyce Chep-humba earned $350,000 (£233,000) after winning the Flora London Marathon yesterday in what the organisers deemed a world record - yet she did not even run the fastest marathon by a Kenyan woman on the day, or even the fastest by a woman on the London course. Her time was also three minutes slower than that posted by a Kenyan rival last year.

Chepchumba won a $125,000 (£83,000) bonus for breaking the London marathon world record because the race organisers do not recognise times set by women in mixed races. According to the London marathon, a woman running among men is unfairly advantaged, or male-assisted; the chief offence being to run in between a group of men and get dragged along in their slipstream. When Chepchumba pulled away to win, her time of two hours, 23 Kenyan claims record prize with time rated as only 13th fastest race, eport David Powell and Adam She win minutes and 22 seconds, ranked as only the 13th best for a woman on the all-time lists kept by the sport's statisticians.

But the London organisers have refused to acknowledge the time which all other marathons regard as world records: the 2hr 20min 47sec which Tegla Loroupe, Chepchumba's fellow Kenyan, ran in Rotterdam last year.

London marathon organisers believe that Loroupe's world mark was contrived because it was achieved in a mixed race and they say it should not be allowed. Given that the leading international men run marathons almost 20 minutes faster than the opposite sex, male pacemakers can assist them to fast times in various ways, such as by shielding them from the wind. To add to the confusion, Loroupe yesterday and finish in 2:22.48, a faster time than thepchumba's big-carning win.

Tim Hutchings, the London race administrator, said if at the Rotterdam marathon and unfair advantage. "Tegla was even being given encouragement bylos Hermens (the race director) on a motorcycle riding behind her," Mr Hutchings said. John Spurling, 59, was challenged to take part in yesterday's race by two friends at the end of what he described as "an extremely alcoholic" lunch at Langan's Brasserie in the West End last July. He agreed that it would be worth the effort only if a sub-stantial sum could be raised and both the Lord's Taveners and the Animal Health Trust used their contacts to help him secure the pledges. Mr Spurling, whose sport-years had previously been limited to the occasional round of golf, finished the 26-mile 385 yards in five hours and 56 minutes. The two friends - John Bromley, a media consultant, and Richard Shepherd, the

finish to congratulate him. Mr

Spurling said: "I think they

Mr Spurling, who had re-ceived training tips from Se-bastian Coe, the former Olympic champion, and Lee Saxby, a fitness adviser, said one depressing moment was when he was told by a youngster at two miles: "Hurry up. you've got a long way to go."

He said that the first half was relatively easy. "Then along The Highway you saw people coming back on the other side where you were the er side where you were run-ning and it came home to you that you had to go right round the Isle of Dogs.

ympic track athlete David Hemery and the BBC television sports presenter Helen Rollason, who has canoer, were among those who sent the runners and wheelchair athletes on their way. Light winds, a dry course and temperatures of 9C helped the runners in the race, which is expected to raise more than £15 million for charities, including Kosovan refugees. Among yesterday's celebrity runners was the former European boxing champion Spen-cer Oliver, who had to give up his fight career last year after nearly being killed in a bout.

The fancy dress element, which included many of the charity fundraisers, also included two 8ft pirates, five trees, a Lord Nelson, several rhinos and one competitor sitting on a lavatory. The oldest runner was the American Abraham Weintraub, 89, who finished in six hours 31 minutes and 36 seconds.

Most tunners had left the course by 4.30pm, when the St ohn Ambulance reported that it had treated a total of 4.115 runners. Of that figure, 26 had been taken to hospital.

The winner of the men's wheelchair race was the Swiss Heinz Frei, 40, who also won last year's event Monica Wetterstrom, of Sweden, won the women's wheelchair race.

Explosion tests hard-earned social harmony

"WHY US? Why Brixton?" asked Mensah, a black pensioner, as he scoured the frontpage reports of Saturday's explosion outside a supermarket just behind Electric Avenue.

LONDON'S first serious bomb attack for three years left Scotland Yard detectives yesterday with a list of suspects ranging from Serb guer-rillas to neo-Nazis and a lone psychopath.

Detectives cannot even be sure that the nail bomb attack nn the Brixton market in South London was the target. The bomber could have got cold feet or feared the crude device was faulty and dumped it before the bomber reached his destination.

On Saturday night first suspicions focused na Irish terrorists. The last bombings in London were carried out by the IRA during its 1996 campaign which began with the South Quay attack. The IRA has made nail bomb attacks on the main-land against Chelsea Barracks in 1981 and a cavalry when a car bomb packed with nails exploded and killed four. But police and ministers ruled out Irish terrorist squads or any other known terrorist organisations. Kate Hoey, the Home Office minister responsible for the Yard. said intelligence and forensic work had ruled out Irish termissed the possibility of a Serbian attack. Police have also ruled out any suggestion that the bomb was aimed at a particular shop. The bomb has been described as crudely made and about the size of a sandwich box. Detectives said that it was not made with high explosive. which means the iogredients could have been home-made or taken from ammunition. The blast, however, was strong enough to blow a car

Nail bombs have been widely used by terrorist groups and details for their manufacture appear on the Internet. There are also reports that the bag in which the bomb was left may have been stolen by a passerby minutes before the blast. The bag would be a vital piece of ev-

Another market trader. George Jones, said that he also moved the bag seconds before it went off, in an attempt to proiect shoppers.

"A holdall was handed to me by someone who said, 'Somebody's forgotten their shopping.' I unzipped it and opened it wide and I could see what it was," he said.

SAINSBURY'S BANK FRESH BANKING" FROM SAINSBURY'S

Night watch ends in Monet sunrise

Dalya Alberge joins the crowds who shrugged off sleep to enjoy Britain's first 24-hour art show

HORDES of visitors descended on the Royal Academy of Arts in the early hours yesterday for their last chance to catch a Monel sunrise. The first 24-hour exhibition in Britain enabled thousands of people, who could not get tickets during normal hours. to see Monet in the 20th Century before it closed yesterday.

The country's most successful art exhibition, which has attracted an average of 8,300 visitors a day, opened on its last weekend from 8am Saturday until 6pm yesterday. Be-tween midnight and 7am, the crowds poured in.

Young and old were there. some in prams and wheelchairs, others recharging their batteries with a short snooze on one of the gallery benches. Some had set their alarms for 2am, 3am, 4am and onwards; others stayed upright by sip-ping coffee or grabbing a ham-burger near by until their Advance tickets were sold out but people were prepared to queue for those sold at the door. Richard Parker, an estate agent from London, who braved the cold for 45 minutes at about 3am, said he had promised himself that he would see the show. "It was worth it," he said. "I always believe you can spend too much of your life sleeping."

Every person quesconed said that they would do the same it again. Yes, they were tired, but that was nothing against the exhilaration of seeing Monet's shimmering waterlilies and views of London and Venice. If anyone yawned, it had nothing to do with bore-dom. Simone Pitt, from Eastcote, northwest London, discovered that seeing an exhibi-tion at that time had its benefits: "Because you're short of sleep, your senses are heightened. It's absorbing in a differ-dent from Israel, said: "You think differently at night. You have different opinions."

A Belgian man said that his experience had been heightened by the alcohol that he had consumed. "They should have more activities like this. The atmosphere seems more relaxed at night."

Nigel Lingwood, a controller with Unigate, brought his wife and three young children at 3am. His nine-year-old son, Alex, particularly wanted to see the show.

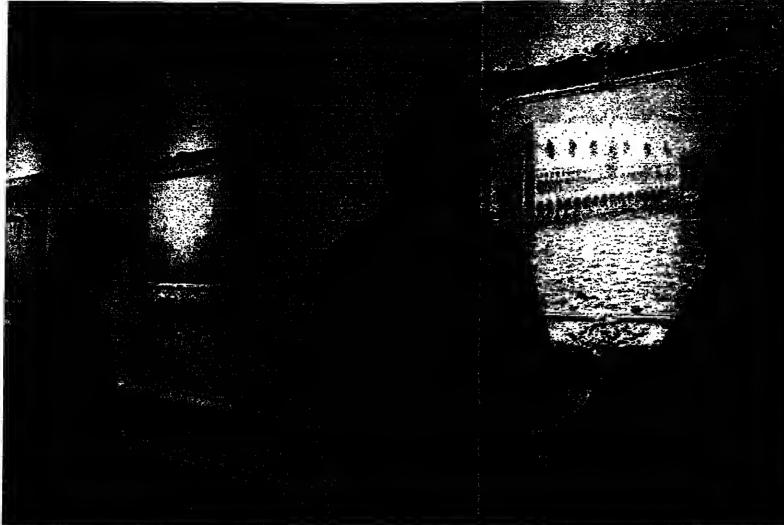

He was not the only young enthusiast. Cato MacLean-Parker, 7, was so keen that he had woken his parents at 3am, an hour earlier than they had set the alarm. His mother. Sheena MacLean, said: "He told us, 'It's time to go.' "

Onlookers gathered around Cato as he sat cross-legged on the floor, making an extraordinarily mature copy of Monet's Charing Cross Bridge. With a fluffy rabbit clutched under one arm, he silently observed the picture and noted its details in a variety of crayons: a sun subily emerging from the missed by another child, but Cato caught it. Enrico Marconi, an Italian composer and conductor who lives in Britain, urged Cato's parents to send him to study painting in Florence and recalled how as a child of that age he had to beg his parents to let him study music.

Claire Drazin, from Burnham, Buckinghamshire, de-scribed herself as a "mad mother" who had been so caplivated by a daytime visit to the show that she simply had to bring her husband and children. William, 10, and Sophia, 8. "We set our alarms for 3.30am," she said. For the children it was an adventure, but they came "on the proviso that we have a slap-up breakfast af-not as old as we thought. We' re amazed at how many were prepared to stay up."

Watson travelled from Stroud, Gloucestershire, and Angela Goodman, a medical receptionist, had travelled for 4% hours on a train from Cornwall: "I would do it again, no problem."

Chris White, a student of in-ternational politics, and Kim Wilkes, a nurse, came down from Nottingham and kept themselves going until their 2am admission slot by "drinking coffee and eating chocolate cake". They were catching a train back straight afterwards.

Exhaustion was taking its toll as time rolled on, but nobody was prepared to give in. At 4am. Vanesa Tate and Aya Yokomichi, students from the Royal Academy of Music, wished that they were "more awake". They rested on a bench after whiling away time in bars, McDonald's restaurants and other venues until entry time.

On the same bench was Elias Kupfermann, who works for local government and was planning to stay for four hours; he had queued for 11/2 hours in Piccadilly. "It's quite tiring, but I'd definitely do it again," he said, Clemmie Burtonhill, an art history student, had survived a night of dubbing in Leicester Square and 45 minutes queueing. She sat momentarily with her head between her knees. Minutes later, she leapt up and was talking about going on to the Kandinsky exhibition in the gallery next door.

Nothing was going to stop

THEY CAME, THEY SAW, THEY SPENT

More than 730,000 people visited Monet in the 20th Century after its opening on January 23. The figure excludes tens of thousands who attended private viewings. The Royal Academy of Arts drew an average of 8,470 visitors a day. making it the most popular exhibition held in Britain. The daily attendance exceeded even that of The Treasures of Tatankhamun, held at the British Museum in 1972.

The British Museum show drew a total of 1.7 millioo visitors, but tha was over nine months. each day, Tutankhamun attracted 6.160 people. A Royal Academy spokeswoman said: "We were up to capacity every single hour." The academy's 1990 Mooet exhibition attracted 7,003 a day. Box-office income for the latest Monet totalled £3.9 million. The show cost £1.8 million to mount. The final profit is not yet known, Postcard sales reached 650,000, at 50p each. The bestselling was Grand Canal in Venice. The academy's shop sold 135,000 exhibitioo catalogues. Sixty thousand were priced at £19.95; an introductory version at £5.95 accounted for the rest. More than 14,000 people bought a Monet calendarfor 2000, costing £9.95 each.

The academy attracted 25,000 young people to its schools and educational workshops, and 55,882 of the exhibition visitors were under 18. A further 16,750 visitors had special needs.

Other popular merchandise included computer mousemats and mugs in waterlily designs, each priced at £9.95. But neither leapt off the shelves with quite the vigour of Philippe the Frog. a £9.95 cuddly toy that sold out.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Man held after killing

A man was arrested yesterday after the killing of a mother of two in Derby. The arrest followed a police appeal for information on the whereabouts of Mark Leicester. 37, who had not been seen since failing to return to Sudbury prison in Ashbourne, Derbyshire, on Thursday night. He had been released from Sudbury, where he was serving a life sentence for stabbing a girlfriend to death more than ten years ago, to spend a day working with handicapped children.

The arrested man gave himself up to police in Rhyl. North Wales, on Saturday. The body of Margaret Thompson, 38, a chambermaid, was found at her flat in Derby on Friday.

Cardinal Hume, 76, who was appointed to Westminster in 1976, has responded with characteristic dignity to the results of hospital tests carried

In his letter to his clergy, he indicated his intention to continue working as long as he could. However, he cancelled plans to celebrate Mass in one of his parishes yesterday. Today he is expected to preside at a memorial Requiem Mass at Westminster Cathedral for the late Bishop Patrick Casey, former Bishop of Brentwood. Hundreds of worshippers went to the cathedral yesterday to pray for the cardinal.

Granada defends suspects' holiday

By TIM JONES

GRANADA Television last night defended its decision to provide the five young men suspected of killing Stephen Lawrence with a holiday in a luxurious Scottish farmhouse.

The revelation that they were taken to the hideaway in Perthshire before their interviews with the journalist Martin Bashir were shown on the current affairs show Tonight has infuriated legal representa-tives of the Lawrence family and some politicians.

Imran khan, who acts for the family, said they had asked him to look at steps they could take through the Broadcasting Standards Council and to consider legal action.

Sources close to the five said that they had been chauffeurdriven, taken go-karting, giv-en tickets to a Scottish football match and played golf at ex-

Why men prefer their news back to front

By Alexandra Frean, social affairs correspondent

RESEARCH into gender differences claims to have solved the riddle of why men flip through magazines from the back, while women start from the front.

Puzzled about why men's magazines on newsagents' shelves had their outer edges curling upwards, while women's titles curved downwards. researchers from the Durrants press cuttings agency set out to discover the reason.

Observation of men at bookstalls and news stands and interviews with editors of men's titles revealed a simple truth: men are so conditioned to turning to the back pages of newspapers for the sports news that they have become virtually incapable of reading anything from the front

Jonathan Shepherd, a director of Durrants, which reads nearly 200,000 newspapers and magazines a year on at the end of the publication - a bit of a reversal of the accepted trends."

Bill Prince, deputy editor of the leading men's title GQ. said that the magazine had its sex page on the inside back page for this very reach The back page is nearly always the 'second entry' after the front cover, because menare conditioned by the position of the sports pages on the national newspapers." Habits were changing, however, he added. "As sport starts to gain front-page status, things will start to change. Meanwhile, men continue to look under the skirts to discover the interesting bits as soon as possible." Liz Hoey, spokeswoman for another leading men's title, FHM, said that the maga-behalf of its clients, said:

"This quite clearly indicates that the top stories should be because it was the best-read page. "Men won't look at the contents page in the newspaper shop. Instead they will dive into the magazine to find out what's going on — almost always starting at the back." But Elsa McAlonan, acting editor of the women's magazinc Marie Claire, said that, while men's conditioning probably stemmed in part from the position of national newspaper sports pages, other forces were also at play. Women, she suggested, were more logical than men and tended to savour their magazines, rather than rush through them for a quick thrill. "Women start at the front because it makes more sense. Men are impatient and think they are getting the picture quicker by starting at

The alliance is pinning its hopes on the arrival of Apache helicopters to turn tide, reports Michael Evans

THE most ominous news for the Nato summit in Washing-Nato is that the Serb forces in Kosovo are digging in for a long war, in anticipation that the alliance might change its mind about not undertaking a ground offensive.

The decision by the Serbs to start building defensive posioons across Kosovo will make it even harder for Nato's air campaign to have any significant impact on Belgrade's forces there. The Serbs know the ierritory better than any Nato planner and will have at least two months in which to plot the defence of Kosovo and strengthen their forces, before the alliance would be in any position to launch a land offensive, were Nato's leaders to reverse their policy. After a bombing campaign that has moved up several gears since March 24, there is no indication of Serb forces leaving the Yugoslav province. Indeed, there are some intelligence reports that reinforcements have recently been sent to Kosovo, bringing the total to more than the 40,000-man figure acknowledged by Nato.

In the week leading up to ton on Friday, the alliance has one remaining hope: that the 48 American Apache attack helicopters being deployed to Albania will begin to turn the war in its favour.

Four weeks of high-flying bombing — at never less than 15,000ft — must have proved to everyone in Nato that aircraft travelling at 500mph at that altitude can never hope to make much of an inroad against an army of 40,000 troops who are digging into well camouflaged positions. Air Marshal Sir John Day,

Chief of Operations at the Ministry of Defence, was honest enough to admit as much when asked whether air power alone could destroy 40.000 troops, armed with 300 tanks and large numbers of artillery and armoured personnel carriers. He said: "It's going to be a very long time before we can be absolutely sure that we have destroyed 40,000 troops and 300 tanks."

Nato says it is ready for a "long haul" campaign, but un-less the attacks on the fuel depots halt President Milosevic's to the threat of being shot down and no one can underestimate the personal courage required to fly through enemy anti-aircraft fire and surfaceto-air missile attacks. But in terms of putting the maximum pressure on the Serb forces in Kosovo, there is no substitute for mixing it at close quarters.

To do so, even in an Apache with sophisticated defensive aids, will mean taking more risks. It is unlikely that Nato aircraft will have destroyed any of the thousands of shoul-der-fired surface-to-air missiles that the Serbs have in Kosovo.

NATO has announced that Yugoslavia's ability to produce oil has been halted by a series of "highly successful" airstrikes carried out yesterday.

Among targets hit in 500 sorties by allied aircraft were 13 armoured vehicles operating in Kosovo and a large oil refinery located at the Serbian city of Pancevo.

"Milosevic no longer has the ability to refine crude oil," said Jamie Shea, the alliance spokesman.

Mr Shea added that the allied air offensive had now "broken the back" of Yugoslavia's integrated air defence system, reducing Serbian forces to makeshift methods for fending off attacks.

His comments came as reports emerged of Kosovo Albanian men being forced into chain gangs to dig graves for their murdered countrymen.

The alliance said that it had photographs to confirm reports that the men, dressed in red or orange jackets, were being forced to bury the victims of Serbia's ethnic purge in the

Nato's evidence showed 43 sites of mass graves in Kosovo. These differed from the opentrench graves dug previously in Serbia's ethnic cleansing, said Brigadier Giuseppe Ma-

rani, the military spokesman. These sites have neat rows of individual graves pointing to the southeast ... to Mecca," he said.

Nato also reported evidence that men and boys had been forced to work digging coal from mines around Pristina which feed the main power sta-tion providing electricity to the Kosovan capital.

The alliance remained on the defensive over its explanation for the attacks on refugee convoys south of the city of Djakovica last Wednesday in which some 70 people were reported to have died. The Pentagon said on Saturday that the Brussels headquarters of the alliance had made a mistake in issuing a recording last Thursday of a pilors account of an attack on a convoy north of Djakovica.

Winston Churchill prepares to defend alliance once more

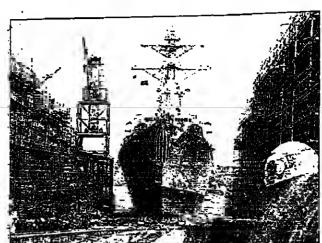

BY DAMIAN WHITWORTH IN BATH, MAINE

WINSTON CHURCHILL is back on the high seas as a force for war.

Britain and America's military leaders broke from directing the conflict in Yugoslavia to travel to Maine this weekend for a ceremony steeped in symbolism: the launch of the USS Winston S. Churchill, the most power ful destroyer to be built.

When she is fully function al early oext year, the ship will be the pride of a US fleet that has not named a vessel after a British figure since the War of Independence more than 200 years ago.

President 'took no part in war plan'

As the conflict loomed, Clinton was distracted by Lewinsky affair, says

Ben Macintyre in Washington

DISTRACTED by the Lewinsky scandal, President Clinton vas not even present at the fateful meeting last January when a plan was formed to use the threat of air power to demand Serb acceptance of a peace deal in Kosovo enforced by Nato ground troops.

The White House meeting on January 19, at which Madeleine Albright, the US Secretary of State, successfully stance against Belgrade, was a vital moment in the build-up to war. But Mr Clinton was preoccupied with his impeachment trial, according to a re-port yesterday in The New York Times that paints a picture of a President whose attention was focused elsewhere as Kosovo erupted.

At the January meeting Ms Albright overcame the reservations of other senior advisers and the plan, demanding Serb acceptance of Nato troops in Kosovo under threat of force for the first time, was sent for approval to Mr Clinton, who was at that moment preparing his State of the Union address while the US Senate listened to arguments on whether he should be thrown out of office.

The President might have made the same decisions with or without the Lewinsky imbroglio. but officials have acknowledged that the Clinton Administration's obsessinn with the scandal made it harder to devote adequate attention to the unfolding Balkan crisis. Bob Dole, the former Republican senator, met Mr Clinton last September after a fact-finding mission to Kosovo but found that "a lot of attention was diverted" from the problem of Yugoslavia by the imly after discussing Kosovo, Mr Clinton switched to the impeachment issue and asked for Mr Dole's help in drumming up support in the Senate against conviction.

The Lewinsky saga was "all consuming . . . this was a critical time in the Monica events", according to Mr Dole, who said he believed a proper assessment of the deteriorating Kosovo situation "may have been one of the casualties" of the scandal.

White House officials have also conceded that when violence began spreading in Kosovo carly in 1988, the administration's energies were deployed elsewhere.

"I hardly remember Kosovo in political discussions. It was all impeachment, impeachment, impeachment. There was nothing else," one presi-dential adviser told The New York Times.

By August 1998, some officials were issuing stark warnings, but again domestic and other concerns intervened. Alexander Vershbow, the US cable calling for an international protectorate in Kosovo enforced by a Nato-Russian

FROM SAM KILEY IN MORINE

ALREADY caught uff balance by the flood of more than 350,000 refugees into Albania over the past three weeks, aid agencies are in danger of being swamped by a renewed tide of victims who have been stranded without shelter in appalling weather.

Refugees crossed the Murine border post yesterday at a rate of 1,000 an buur before Serb security furces inexplicably shut off the flow. In the absence of aid workers, journalists stepped in to hand oot plastic sheeting to freezing and exhausted people already drenched after days in the open.

Others used their vehicles to carry the elderly and sick, many of them suffering from hypothermia, to a tiny field hospital set up by the Italian Army — the only visible sign of the 8.000 Nato troops promised fur humanitarian relief.

Faced with poor plaoning and bureaucratic hold-ups at the headquarters of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Geneva and the United Nations World Food Programme in Rome. field ufficers freely admit that they cannot cope with the exodus from Kosovo.

"It is outrageous. We have the wroug sort of sbeeting, and to make matters worse, we have run out uf it. There have been rows with Geneva over this but our frustrations have just earned us reprimands," said a senior UNHCR field worker.

At first glance the type of plastic sheeting used for shelter might appear to be trivial. But to a refugee hu has been walking fur days and has left hume, murdered relatives and identity papers behind, plastic sheeting represents the difference between aoother night of agouy and relative comfort.

The Albanian authorities have been anxious to keep the refugees moving so that they do not concentrate in the small border town of Kukes. Its population has already doubled and yesterday aid workers were expecting an influx of a further 50,000 to 80,000 people.

Last night families huddled under blankets in the town's streets and already medical workers have given warning of outbreaks of hepatitis, pneumonia and dysentery.

Beatrice: can stay until her eggs hatch

Council fails to break its duck

A DUCK bolding up a £15 million millennium project was sitting pretty yesterday after being saved from eviction.

A dispute broke out after the mallard, named Beatrice, laid eggs in an ancient spa pool in Bath shortly before renovatinn work funded by the national lottery was to start. Council chiefs wanted the duck removed so that they could start water tests, but spa staff demanded that she be allowed to stay until her eggs had hatched.

Yesterday Beatrice's supporters were celebrating after the Department of the Environment refused to grant the council a licence to move her.

Margaret Stewart, of the Springs' Foundation. said: "It is a victory for common sense. Nobody wanted her to be moved. Now she can sit in peace until the eggs hatch in May.

"And she will be there for a few weeks after that as she teaches ber little ones bow to fly", she added. "Everyone who has been involved in this is absolutely delighted and Beat-rice herself looks extremely happy with the decision."

The council wants to re-store the 2,000-year-old pool to its former glory. but the project — already £1.5 million over budget came to a halt when Beatrice laid her eggs in a flowerpot beside Cross Bath. Now the council will have to carry out the work around the duck without

'Road rage' killer's confession dismissed by victim's family

THE family of the man murdered by Tracie Andrews yesterday accused her of trying to "save her own skin" after she finally confessed to the killing, in a letter from prison.

Andrews, who was jailed for life in 1997 for the murder of Lee Harvey after claiming that an unknown "road rage" killer had stabbed him 35 times, wrote that she had "lost all control". The 30-year-old convicted killer, from Alvechurch, Worcestershire, said in the let-ter that she had felt sick as she cradled her dying fiancé on the roadside after the attack in December 1996.

At her trial at Birmingham Crown Court in 1997, the former model vehemently denied involvement in Harvey's death. Her confession to the killing, which was sent to the News of the World 21 months after her conviction, infuriated he parents, because she claimed that he was a violent aggressor who had pulled a.

Harvey's mother, Maureen, 53, said: "She hasn't confessed because she's turning to religion or is remorseful — she is doing it to save her skin. She knows that she's got to admit her crime before she can be considered for parole. That is why she's done it."

While police were still seeking the mythical "road-rage" killer, Mrs Harvey had supported Andrews at a press conference, not knowing that Andrews had killed her son. Yesterday Mrs Harvey said: "I wanted to believe that Lee had been killed in a road-rage attack. My motherly instinct told me to give her the benefit of the doubt. Now, with the confession, I feel stripped of everything."

Ray Harvey, Lee's father, 54, said: "Finally - now the truth has come out - our son can rest in peace. We have always known Tracie would one day admit her guilt. At least now the rest of the world knows what she is. She is a lying, evil, murdering bitch."

The letter says that Andrews flew into a rage after arguing with Harvey about her former lover, Andy Tilston, while driving back from a pub. As the row turned into a fight, she claims that Harvey produced a knife and threatened her with it, and that he dropped it in the scuffle. She wrote: "I fell. I saw the knife on the floor, picked it up and when he went for me again I just reacted with the knife. I must have

Andrews then decided to concoct the story about a "road-rage" killer. "My whole life had ended . . . I knew I had to make it look as though we had been attacked," the letter stabbed him."

Andrews went on to say that had she not lied to police she might now have been serving a sentence for manslaughter instead of murder. She said she had wanted to confess because "the more I keep things bottled up inside the worse I'm making myself feel".

The letter said that Lee got out of the car and pulled a knife. He "grabbed my hair. He said, 'See if Andy wants you with a ed up face He had a knife and I was scared.

With that I kneed him, he fell down and pulled me down too ... He punched me again, I fell, I saw the knife on the floor, picked it up and when he went for me again I just reacted with the knife. I must have stabbed him then he stood still ... and hit me so hard I fell again. I just went mad.

Andrews wrote: "I went back over to Lee and tried talking, shaking him, I could hear him breathing in a bad way, I saw his eyes go to the back of his head, I could smell this awful smell and I felt the wetness on my hands.

"I knew the police would" After the killing a man came to help. "I made up a story about us being attacked. I went to the hospital. I flushed the knife down the toilet." Andrews gave the false story to the police. The letter reads: "I do feel I should have been convicted of manslaughter. I should have told the truth in the first place and used my defence."

She subsequently attempted

The Harvey family denied that their son had carried a knife. Ray Harvey said: "It is a complete fairy-tale. I believe she had taken the knife out with her."

Both Andrews's solicitor and the News of the World declined to comment on how the letter had reached the newspaper and whether it would be the subject of any payment.

Colleges to seek higher tuition fees

By ELIZABETH JUDGE ND CHRISTINE MIDDAP

UNIVERSITIES believe that they have weathered the impact of £1,000 tuition fees and are ready to lobby for higher charges in the next Parliament, a survey by The Times has shown.

Fears that dropout rates would soar as students were faced with their first bills have proved unfounded, university officials said. Applications from school leavers have also held up, although the fees appear to have deterred many older applicants.

Detailed figures, published today in the first instalment of The Times Good University Guide, show that some former polytechnics have been badly affected, however. Thames Valley University, which had a rescue plan agreed by the Higher Education Funding Council for England last Friday, had seen a 19 per cent drop in applications.

However, De Montfort, another former polytechnic, re-corded the biggest increase, with almost 20 per cent more two other new universities Abertay and Lincolnshire and

A separate survey showed that most students were overcoming the financial impact of tuition fees. No university reported a rise in dropout rates and Barclays Bank said the number of students in debt on graduation had risen by only per cent in four years.

Tuition fees for full-time undergraduates will rise by £25 for 1999-2000, in line with inflation. But many vice-chancellors are anxious to see a much larger increase after the next election. That would require the assent of both Houses of Parliament.

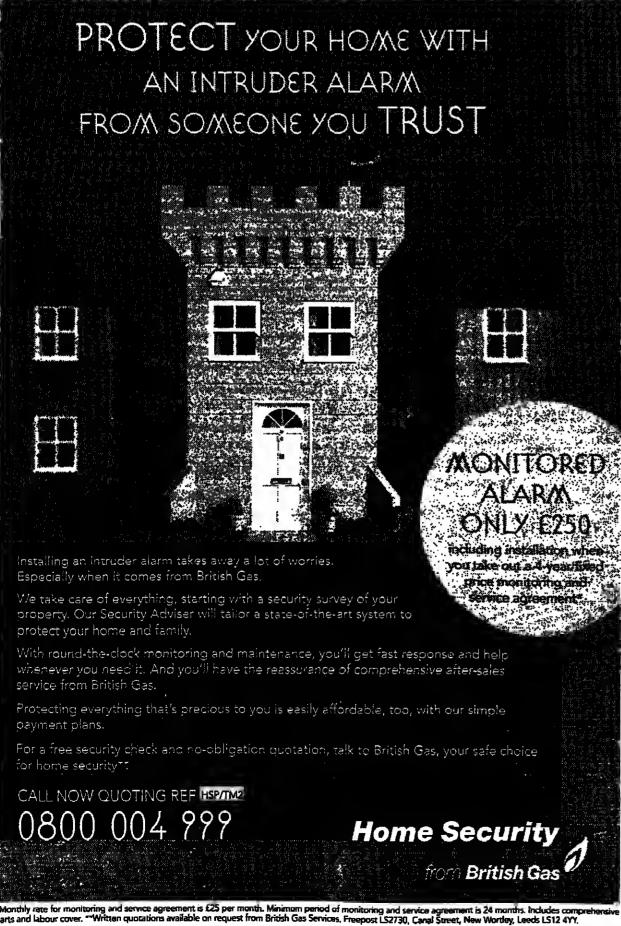

Few university yet have complete data on this year's dropout rates. But Hilary Layton. public relations officer for York University, said only five students had left for financial reasons: "There is no doubt that financial problems are becoming more serious, but they are not serious enough yet to be influencing dropout rates."

Lesley Munro, academic registrar of the University of Central Lancashire, said early indications suggested that retention may be slightly up on previous years. "It will probably take a couple of years before we know the impact."

Professor Les Ebdon, the deputy Vice-Chancellor at Plymouth University, said: "I think that the impact of the fee and of loans has been to make students think more carefully about applying."

visit at a crucial time for British trading links

THE Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh are not the most dedicated of football fans, but they will be unable to avoid the game when they begin a four-day state visit to South Korea today, the first by a British monarch to the South-East Asian tiger economy that is struggling to recover its roar.

Tomorrow the Duke will tour the £105 million stadium being built in Seoul for the 2002 World Cup, which Korea is co-hosting with Japan after long wranglings in Fifa, world football's governing body. Japan has already won the right to the final and the two countries are horse-trading over which of the remaining 64 fixtures each will host.

Seoul has secured the opening ceremony and the first eame. The Queen, touring the world's largest all-female university, with 18,000 students. will meet Im Eun Joo, who has become the world's first woman to qualify as an international football referee.

But the visit is more about celebrating 202 years of contact between countries that have remained allies, except for periods of Japanese occupation, since Captain William Broughton sailed his survey ship HMS Providence into Pusan harbour in 1797. Coincidently, the visit begins 39 years to the day since militant Korean students revolted against the government of President Singman Rhee on April 19, 1960. The Queen's presence recognises that Korea has gone well down the democratic road since then. Her host, President Kim Dae Jung, last year became the first opposition leader to be elected to his country's highest office. First proposed in 1986, when

King 'paid official' for illegal hunts

By Adam Sage

SENIOR French official is to lose his job for allowing King Hassao of Morocco to hold pheasant and stag hunts on his 700-hectare estate on the outskirts of Paris.

The replacement of Jean-Marie Ballu, director of the National Hooting Office, comes amid allegations that the King paid government environ-mentalists to invite politi-cians and diplumats to illegal hunts at his château at Gretz-Armaiovilliers.

According to Le Paris ien, an employee of the office, — a body meant to protect and study game lives oo the King's estate, where he oversees huots. The uewspaper also claimed that the salary of a secood employee was funded by the Morocean Royal Family in return for favours. Not only did the office turn a blind eye to the hunting, bot it also helped to organise them. Le Parisien said.

A contract between the office and the King in 1988 stipulated that buots could be held at the estate only to control the oum-ber of animals, which would then be used for research. There have been many huots, but no scientific reports.

Move to Berlin marks a shift in country's view of itself

time today in the new Reichstag, decked out with a glass dome that shines out of the Berlin gloom like a lighthouse in the fog.

Everyone seems pleased with the architect. Sir Norman Foster, though there are still a few grumbles about brightly coloured wooden panels and the narrow widths of the seats for the parliamentarians.

There were poliocal and aesthetic battles along the way. The shape of the German eagle was changed several times until it ended up as a vaguely familiar overfed hen. Sir Norman wanted grey seats and had to settle for a lighter shade of Prussian blue; indeed one could see the whole project as Prussia Light, a safe low-

The Reichstag witnessed some of the most tense confrontations in modern German history: it was set ablaze in 1933. providing the Nazis with an excuse to implement emergency powers: in the dying days of the Second World War, Soviet soldiers regarded it as one of the great prizes of Berlin.

Graffiti scrawled by Russian soldiers was found during the restoration work and Sir Norman has shrewdly kept the Cyrillic etching as part of the interior design. But German politicians have been keen to drop the name Reichstag, which means the imperial parliament

Today's parliamentary session will be brief and Bonn —

apart from setpiece events such as the election of the President next month - will remain the political cockpit of Germany until the summer. But crates of ministerial archives are being loaded onto trains and trucks for the trin to Berlin and the machinery of government will slowly shift into metropolitan gear. Civil servants are being offered packages of £30,000 to make the reluctant move eastwards.

The Reichstag is not the only tainted building in Berlin: Goering's air ministry will house the Finance Ministry, and the old Reichsbank, where some Nazi gold was stored, will become the Foreign Ministry. The Chancellor, Gerhard Schröder, will preside over a "Berlin Repub-lic" and so he is condemned to talk of history and of the fu-ture, in a different way from Helmut Kohl.

Even if Herr Kohl had won the election, be would have had to change his rhetoric; it is impossible to rule from the old Prussian capital as if one is still squatting on the banks of the Rhine. Poland is an hour down the road, and the place brims with Russian shoppers at weekends. It is the most cosmopolitan of German cities.

German analysts tell mc. rightly, that Berlin is a deeply provincial capital and one should not expect any big psy-chological shifts in German political behaviour. Some power will seep out of the system by moving out of Bonn. The fight for the soul of German conservatism will be contested between the Swabian, Wolfgang Schäuble, the Bavarian, Edmund Stoiber, and the Hamburger, Volker Rühe, Berlin does not figure.

As for the Government, its destiny is increasingly being settled in Brussels; local governments too look to the European Commission rather thanmove to Berlin may thus mark not so much the rebirth of an assertive new Germany but highlight its weaknesses.

Yet shifting eastwards really does matter, not only because it brings Russia closer. East Germans are different and the poliocians in Bonn will have to address these differences.

n Kosovo, for example. East Germans with a memory of Warsaw Pact-led "policing" operations - are far more caudous than West Germans. Seventy per cent of West Germans approve of the participation of the German Army in the Nato operation; only 25 per cent of East Germans agree. This is becoming an important part of the political dynamic. The ex-to the federal capital. The Communist Party of Democraoc Socialism, which speaks for many East Germans and which is fiercely against the Kosovo war, will find it difficult to enter regional coalinons with Social Democrats.

The PDS is showing the way for Green dissidents. On May 13 the Greens hold a special party congress on the war and the signs are that they will revolt against their leader, the Foreign Minister. Joschka Fischer.

If the war continues for another month the German Government will look brinle indeed. Even if it does not collapse, the first lesson of the Berlin Republic will be cyident: Germany has become difficult to rule in moments of international crisis.

30 die as militia take control of Timor's capital

FROM PATRICIA NUNAN IN JAKARTA AND DAVID WATTS

ARMED pro-Indonesian militiamen were in control of the East Timorese capital of Dili last night after a weekend of terror in which a loyalist leader called for the "cleansing" of all those in favour of independence from indonesia. The weekend of brutality left at least 30 people dead, although the army maintained the total was 12. Witnesses said that militiamen were roaming the streets unchecked by security forces. The militiamen are control-

Watching from the sidelines

As the Nato action in Serbia intensifies, those who were there can only wait for news and despair. Below, Lucy Hawking interviews a peace monitor and Eve-Ann Prentice speaks to three exiled Kosovans living in London

Then the order to evacuate came. monitors moved fast. Less than 24 hours after receiving the order to leave Kosovo, the team of international peace monitors were installed in an our-of-season holiday resort in Macedonia. Four days later, the bombing started.

"lt's an unpleasant irony that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia made our extraction very easy." says Captain Tom Kenyon, a British member of the verification team. who has returned to the UK after spending four months in Kosovo. "In many respects. they were only too happy to see us go - the horrific thing being that as we left via the south, the tanks were rolling in from the north." Originally.

the plan had been to evacuate the monitors to Skopje, the Macedonian capital just south of the Kosovo border. In the event, it was decided to take the unarmed force further still away from the threat of attack. Suddenly transplanted from a war zone to a holiday resort, the disbanded force tried to come to terms with the shock of a lightexodus ning from the province they had worked so hard to save. Within hours

a largely impoverished country into a much better country. We were living in a series of hotels on the edge of a lake which had especially good trout. It was bizarre," says Kenyon.

During their stay in Macedonia, the team's only source of information about Kosovo was satellite television. From it, he learnt that some of the ethnic Albanians he had worked with had made it out of Kosovo. "We saw the first load of refugees come through and with joy we saw some of our interpreters being interviewed." he says. But the few he knows to have escaped from the warfare in Kosovo constitute a tiny propornion of the people he be-friended and worked with during his time there. His last posting in Kosovo was in the largely Serbian enclave of Brezovica, a former ski resort. Many of the young men were called up to join the conscript army. "I'm fully aware of the effect of accurate air attacks and they'd have been directed at those conscript soldiers."

Kenyon developed good relations with people on all sides in Kosovo. His job as a moni-tor meant he spent all the daylight hours out in a bright orange armoured Land Rover, covering about 20 villages. We'd go into the villages and meet all the various dignitaries. We'd also talk to the police and the army and try to get everyone's trust."

As an army officer who specialised in reconnaissance. Kenyon had gone to Kosovo because he felt he had specialised skills to offer the mission. "Reconnaissance is getting information, finding out what's behind the next hill - who is there? And what do they intend to do? says Kenyon.

When he arrived in mid-November, the reception from the local people was rapturous. "As we drove through Albanivillages, children and adults were running out and waving. It was reminiscent of the Allies driving through France in 1944." The overwhelming hospitality of the locals made his job very slow. At each house, they would be invited for coffee and burek, a type of honey cake - but only to meet the men of the family. The women, especially the young girls, stayed in a separate room. "Albanian culture keeps men and women apart," says Kenyon. "While the mass rapes we have heard of from Kosovo would be horrific in any culture, the fact that it has happened in such a segregated society makes it doubly so."

Listening to stories told by the families was a major part of the monitors job. "It was important for us to establish what had happened in those areas. Yet in terms of what has gone on lately, it was not that horrendous. In an area of 10,000 people, 17 were killed over that summer. I'm not trying to excuse that but these are not enormous quantities, compared to what has happened in the last few weeks."

Officially, the monitors' remit was to verify the ceasefire brokered last summer between the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) and the Yugoslav Government forces. In practice, their jobs encompassed wide range of achelping to locate relatives held in prison, to negotiating with the po-lice and KLA to prevent workers in the vineyards from being harassed.

Getting the electricity turned back on was a regular task. "The infrastructure of the country had been completely neelected." says "The Kenyon. roads are all worn to pieces, the sewage systems and electricity supplies are in a terrible state." In the extreme cold of Kosovo's last winter, the lack of electricity affected the monitors more acutely than it did the locals. "While the Albanians had these fantastic woodburning stoves, they would put us op in these palatial houses where the electricity kept going off." For five days over Christmas, a power cut at the house Kenyon shared with : cal conditions were severe for two other monitors meant no heat - in temperatures that . around ten hours every day dropped to minus 20C - no : driving their Land Rovers light and no running water.

"It really was horribly cold." lage had given Kenyon for his cooked in a clay oven in a restaurant and then eaten cold. "We had oil lamps and a bit of the local spirit, lozar, which fortunately is pretty strong stuff," he says. While the physi-

THE THREE YOUNG men are typical of thirtysomethings the world over. Their idea of a good time is a beer in the pub, playing basketball and staying up late with friends at the weekend. Their prospects should be good: one is a philosopher, one an economist and one an electrical engineer. Yet their faces are gaunt. Ready smiles never quite reach their eyes which are etched with lines of chronic

The three young men are ethnic Albanians from Kosovo. Infighting between Serbs and ethnic Albanians has been at the core of many outbreaks of violence in the past, and brothers Nysret and Habib Sariqi, and their cousin Musa Sariqi, came to Britain in the early 1990s after fleeing one of the many surges of vio-lence in the province they know as Ko-

ing the faces of those they love among the tidal wave of refugees flooding out of Kosovo. They are typical of thousands of their compatriots living in this country, all desperate for news about those they left behind and helpless to do more than live as close to penury as possible. This is so they can send the bulk of the money they earn washing cars and working as waiters to the finely tuned network of Albanian organisations

Nysret, Habib and Musa were doing well at their university in the Kosovan capital, Pristina, until, they say. Serb harassment and beatings forced them to leave separately between September 1992 and December 1993.

Now they are frantic for news about Nysret and Habib's mother Elhame, their sister Mejreme, and her two-and-a-half-year-old daughter Gentiana. The only glimmer of hope has been a phone call from Musa's sister-in-law Elife. The family had been forced to leave Kosovo and Elife was in hospital in the Macedonian capital, Skopje, after giving birth to a baby girl, Musa's brother Nexhmedin, 43, and nephew Safet, 16, had been seen in the Brazde refugee camp in Macedonia, but she knew no more. Since then, there bas been no news.

"We go through different moods," says Habib, 31. Sometimes you feel like steel, with no feelings any more. Sometimes you feel like crying. You wonder what your family looks like if they are dead. Every minute it's a different feeling." Nysret says he can no longer see a future for his family in Kosovo, even if the refugees are eventually allowed to go home. "I had friends who were Serbs, who never did us any harm," he says. "but now I would kill them if I went back."

Unlike his cousins, Musa is married. He has an 18-month-old son and his wife Igballe is pregnant with another child. They live in northwest London, just a couple of miles from the car wash business he manages in Mill Hill.

The young men go on to describe the harassment which they say drove them from Kosovo. When the Pristi-na university at which be was studying closed in 1991, Musa began working as a taxi driver. An Albanian rights group asked him to deliver leaflets which were discovered during a search at a roadblock. After that constant harassment forced him to leave.

Nysret, meanwhile, was arrested after taking part in student demonstra-tions. 'The Serbs would slap you, hit you and call your mother names," says the economist. Habib says: "The police would think that every Albanian had a gun, so you had to produce one when they came to search your home, whether you owned one or not. so they could confiscate it."

Not knowing the whereabouts of their family is driving them all to distraction. Nysret says he can no longer work as a waiter "because I cannot smile any more".

The Albanians, who received a lot of Western infor, mation, remained friendly if more distant than at first. The Serbs, however, tended to get only local Serbian television. The only education they'd had was this blatant misinformadon, so they saw us as training the KLA, and more and more began to dislike us. There were cases of children running out into the road to stone orange vehicles."

As the winter ended, violence in the villages in Kenyon's area was growing -bodies by the side of the road became a frequent sight. On one occasion Kenyon had to chase off a pack of dogs to recover a human jawbone from a skull the strays were chewing. "Things had deteriorated in terms of death tolls, of otfor-tat murders - there had beeo a few massacres and in some cases legitimate attacks on KLA forces."

the beginning of March, Kenyon was sure the end for the mission was coming. Whether we'd all the guns, all the kit, didn't matter, there was not the political will to change the situation."

With the worsening diplomatic position, the presence of the monitors in Kosovo threatened to create a potential hostage situation, making their withdrawal a matter of urgency. We'd worked out various codings for withdrawing. It was supposed to be like the D-Day landings - Broadsword calling Danny Boy' sort of stuff. In reality, the commanders had a meeting, decided we weren't achieving our mission. jumped on their mobile phones and we legged it."

Kenyon will not be returning to Kosovo with his regiment. He is leaving the Army after ten years as an officer with the Household Cavalry. One day, he says, he may return to the area he came to know so well - perhaps to help with the reconstruction of postwar Kosovo. But not yet. "I would find it very difficult to go back there now," he says. "1 think the Kosovo I knew now does not exist."

KELLY HOPPEN

Describe your personal style. I like to create an environment where texture and touch are combined with a feeling of the philosophy of the East.

If you could go back to any cra, when would it be?
I love the period of The Great-Gatsby. I love the clothes and all those parties.

What is your favourite shop and why?
Takashimaya in New York is Takashimaya in New York is a very balanced and selective: shop where everything is beautiful — you just want to buy it all. Egg in London is similar but on a smaller scale. You know it's going to be an experience going to either shop.

Hoppen: Great Gatsby fan

Who is your style icon?
Frank Lloyd Wright. His use of space and light was both exceptional and inspirational.

What can you not leave thehouse without and why? My perfume. I created it myself. It is quite fruity with a tinge of the East. It smells like part of me.

What is your favourite city?

New York. I get a real buzz as soon as I get off the plane. I love everything about it from the coffee to the people. It is phenomenal.

What three things can instantly change the look of a room?
Lighting is a huge factor, it can change the atmosphere and the feeling of a room completely. Greenery and flowers are a great way to introduce nature to your living area and cushions are always an easy way to update or change the look of anywhere.

What is your style motto? Balance is the key to life.

been waiting for Red Godfrey has

Red Godfrey has just launched a range of designs that will become long-term players - beautifully cut, understated, flattering and fashionable clothes that are perfect to wear every day nce in a while a new line of clothes comes along that makes you wonder how you managed without it. Godfrey was launched in the shops this spring and has already outsold Joseph in Liberty's.

The clothes, almost all in cottons that have been treated with glazes to make them waterproof or add sheen, appear to be simple, in the tradition of APC, but have the kind of thoughtful details that elevate them miles above the rest.

In fashion terms they're basics - except that now most people dress so casually that these clothes could easily solve the problem of everyday dressing. Shirt-jackets and aprondresses with glazed taffeta finishes are reversible (one side matt. one side slightly shiny, both col-ours desirable): trousers come without side seams to make them slimming but with adjustable waist fasteners: skirts have drawstring waists, but only at the back, so that the fashion victim in you is catered for, but the front of the waistband remains flatteringly flat and your stomach does, too,

All the pieces in this mainly black, taupe, navy, white and turquoise collection are beautifully cut in that understated way that means they'll become long-term players in the wardrobe.

It was Coco Chanel the worman responsible for the first capsule wardrobe more than 60 years ago. in black jersey - who said that "beauty comes when fashion succeeds". Red Godfrey, the voluble 31-year-old designer behind Godfrey, puts it another way; "I used to get hung-up on inventing an amazing idea that looked great on the catwalk until I realised that brilliant catwalk ideas don't necessarily make great clothes."

Despite the vaguely radical appearance — bullet-cropped hair that used to be red (hence the sobriquet: she was christened Paula) and little sign of personal vanity (other than an unwillingness to admit that she was born in Uxbridge) she is, one suspects, profound-sensible. It comes as no surprise to discover that two of her favour-ite designs are Catseyes and the Bic ballpoint pen or that she was good at maths and science at school. She had to coax

She is happy to keep producing the same cuts season after season if they work. "What I want to do is design clothes that are slick but comfortable and which make life easier. In the early Nineties you could put on a suit to look smart, now it's not so straightforward - but 1 think that with three pairs of good trousers and a couple of the right skirts you'd have enough for 90 er cent of the time."

Red Godfrey: "Brilliant catwalk ideas don't always make great clothes" Recently a buyer from one of the stores she sells to asked where her millennial party dresses were. She had avoided designing any - rather astutely when you consider how many times women buy a big-event outfit, and how often they buy black trousers.

COLLENS GEM WEATHER

The last refuge of the big spender

EVER since the media outcry about President Clinton's $200 haircut a few years ago, the public's Calvinistic disapproval of costly exercises in personal vanity seems to have diminished to the point of extinction. First there was John Barrett. the celebrity New York-based hairdresser who came to Londoo to ply his £250 haircuts for a limited run last

Not only was he mobbed, but he could, he oow says, have charged £500 a head and still they would have flocked. Granted, the money went to help the rehabilitation of addicted prisoners. but even so, oo one could have predicted the Englishwoman's oew-found propensity for lavishing money on her hair. Now comes news that Sheryl Crow had decided that only one man in the world is to be entrusted with her newly shorn locks — the man responsible for cutting them in the first place. I can petsonally vouch for the talents and niceness of Joel Gonçalves. So trustworthy is his face, so reassuring his Scouse-Portuguese patter. that it's all too easy to drop your normal guard in the face of approaching scissors.

lose yourself completely in Hello! - and emerge an hour later to discover almost all your hair on the floor.

Even so, I'm agog at the largesse of Crow's record company which is now picking up the hill for him to fly to wherever their star might be in the US, as well as making up the shortfall in his earnings while he is absent from the Mayfair branch of John Frieda for two days. He estimates that A&M won't see much change out of £6,000 and now that she has the kind of haircut that requires trimming at least every six weeks. it's easy to see how the company's profits might take a dip.

Women have long known that in the absence of organised religion. hairdressing salons are the next best thing to a confessional. But perhaps the real point is that in these times when most celebrities tend not to wear too many diamonds or furs a really expensive hairdresser is becoming the last refuge of the hig spender.

■ On a more accessible note, the rather elegant Martha Grahamesque look that Donna Karan manages to achieve on her catwalk is — apart from the ravishingly beautiful models she uses — achieved with the double hair bands that scoop back their hair. Previously achievable only with plenty of time and a star hair-dresser at your disposal, the look is now relatively available on a high street near you, thanks to Johnnie and Rosie's hra bands. £5.99 from a selection of department stores (Hennes does a version for £1.99). In half a dozen colours, these dou-

hie, stretchy straps fasten round the head like a hra strap. Buying them is only the start of the battle, however. There's a knack, inevitably, to using them successfully: place both straps on the hair line, fasten, then gently slide the back strap back along the hair to a position that's comfortable. But once it's mastered, they're a chic solution to short hair, long hair, greasy hair, floppy hair and a good alternative to flowery, sparkly clips. One proviso - mine was so tight to begin with that it pulled all my features upwards, gave me eyes an oriental slant and left me with quite a headache, until I realised what was happening and removed it. I'm told by aficionados that this will wear off once it has been worn in and, in any case, what's a hit of discomfort compared with a mini-facelift?

Torched by Hitler in 1933 and bombarded by the Russians in 1945, the Reichstag was reconstructed in the 1960s as government offices. Now Foster has scooped out the shell to restore the original logic of the classical building, its mirror symmetry, its vistas and enfilades, its generous spaces and lofty proportions. While in theory these seats are pre-assigned, members can move forward to take up empty places towards the front. "The idea is to create a chamber within a chamber," says Nelson. This sense of enclosure is increased by suspending the gallery seats for the public well out into the chamber like the grand circle of a theatre.

A special feature of the Bundestag are the very large "faction" rooms or debating cham-

Though the debating chamber has windows on two sides into internal courtyards, Foster wanted natural light to flood down from above. He achieves this by an extraordinary form of conical light scoop with 300 mirrors which even on a dull day reflect daylight into every part of the chamber.

Sunlight streaming in from above enlivens the spirit, but with a clear glass dome it was essential to avoid glare. So a special sunshade, powered by photovoltaic cells which collect

The surprise at the very top is to find the central eye of the dome open to the elements, like the Pantheon in Rome, allowing the rain to cascade in (it all disappears neatly intodrains and circles under the ramps). The central oculus also has a raised halo, an ingenious device which stops a strong wind blowing air - or snow — into the dome.

He writes healing plays about the gay life and about the relaconship between homo and hetero. He seems to want to build bridges across the British class divide, too. Destination Heaven: Andrew Lincoln (Danny)

David Kennedy and tespecially) Rose Keegan give wonderfully funny performances as a Cockney bike-courier and his eagerly twittering middle-class girl, are they always credible? It says much for Harvey's warmth that the former is a salt-ofthe earth type who tearfully tells his brother Connor he's ace and his brother's dying lover he's as good as a win on the lottery: "You've made him the happiest man on God's earth." I am not so convinced it says a lot for divided world.

"Othello is a very difficult part," says Ray Fearon, who tackles the role with the RSG this week. "There is a danger of burning your flame

ast season Ray Fearon played Romeo for the Royal Shakespeare Company. A passionate, earnest boy, out of his depth in a grown-up world of love and violence, he was convincingly desperate and even noble. Now he is cast as the RSC's Othello, matched again with his Juliet, Zoe Waites, and directed once more by Michael Attenborough. But wait. Isn't he too young for the part? Does he have sufficient authority. the necessary gravitas for Shakespeare's tragic hero?

When Fearon arrives at the RSC's Clapham rehearsal rooms after his regular morning run, he is barely recognisable as the boyish actor who, it is said. set teenage hearts aflutter during the Romeo and Juliet tour. He is commonly referred to as "a hunk", but he now cuts a more substantial figure and he is sporting a beard. "We had to do the posters ages ago," he explains, "and Michael asked me to have some idea how I intended to look, so I shaved my head and grew a beard." The result is an impression of maturity. There is certainly nothing tentative about his manner, either. As we cross Clapham High Street to have lunch at the local tapas bar he says "I will stop the traffic for you", raises his hand and a line of trucks grinds obediently to a halt. Doubts vanish. This is a man who won't have any trouble quelling the rioters in Cyprus and carrying off the order: "Keep up your bright swords."

Age is not, he says, a prerequisite for the part of Othello. "He is a general and a fighting one at that. We have, as it happens, cut the line about the 'vale of years', but it wouldn't make any difference if it were there. He is insecure at that point; he is black and he's aware of the distance between himself and Desdemona, who is very young. But after all, she is, as lago says, a supersubtle Venetian; she wouldn't fall for an old man. She is one of the strongest characters in the play: she stands up in the Senate before the Duke and goes to war to join Othello." Fearon is 31 now and when he took on Romeo he said that playing a much younger character was the hardest thing he had had to do. He was already used to princes and generals and had even played Othello at 24, although he would prefer not to talk about that. "It's just that it has no bearing on the way I'm doing now," he explains.

Fearon is an RSC veteran - this is his fourth season since 1993 - and he has benefited from the system. He has graduated reasonably quickly to leading roles and learnt much from senior members of the company, including how to tackle the verse, having taken masterclasses from John Barton and Adrian Noble. "People are unfair to the RSC; it is doing a hell of a lot for young actors." With insufficient training opportunities in regional theatre. pressure falls on the major companies. Fearon says that he was unusually lucky in that he cut his dramatic teeth in Oxford, Liverpool and Manchester. The Fearon career curve is scarcely typical, however. The fifth of seven children, he began to get work in television commercials when he was still at school in West London. Opportunities rolled in - he was in Caryl Churchill's Serious Money, for instance — but he decided he didn't know enough about his profession and went belatedly to drama school in his early twenties. "I deliberately went out of London—to Rose Bruford College in Kent—so that I wouldn't be tempted to take jobs." He paid his way by training to be a tennis coach. He had played in the England junior team and says that life might have been very different if the Greater London Council had not ceased to exist and funding for young players dried up. Fearon laughs when reminded that he said playing young Romeo was the biggest challenge. "I was wrong. Othello is a very difficult part. There is a danger of burning your flame too early. It hurdes at such a pace, you could run out of steam. You could be tempted to think you're on the right track and, after the jealousy scene, go mad and shout." He is aware of the need for a sense of balance. "I don't want to overplay the race card, to go overboard. Othello is an outsider, but he does really love Desdemona, has been invited to her father's house, and whatever is said about him, he's the best man for the job and he knows it. As a soldier used to war he is going into unfamiliar territory. He and lago have fought together. confided in each other, perhaps saved each other's lives. Iago is a married man; it's natural that Othello would take the advice of a more experienced man. Othello is open and honest, but then jealousy becomes an addiction. It is a play about wanting to know the truth. He must have proof, but he never stops loving Desdemona. At the end he is right, though; he never has been earon is very much aware of the power of the language, noting that Othello lapses into prose when he is out of control and that he "catches" lago's choice of bestial comparisons when his mind has been poisoned by him. The play is intense. "like a pressure cooker. The language has to do the work; it's not easy, but it's worth the adventure. Othello is like a pendulum, swings one way and then another; after the fit (which I think is a sort of panic attack) he contradicts himself from line to line. He changes his own mind."

As a young actor tackling one of the great roles. Fearon couldn't be happier. i love Shakespeare. These parts are so huge, so deep, they make you question yourself all the time." Ten years ago the opera singer Willard White played Othello in an RSC production directed by Trevor Nunn for The Other Place in Stratford and the Young Vic in London. But Fearon says proudly: "I am the next black person to Paul Robeson to play the part on the main Stratford stage. And to me that is an honour." Othello opens at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford (D1789-295623) on Wednesday night of Unanswered Questions. First came Charles Ives's work of that name. Then the questing gestures of Carl Ruggles, and finally Bruckner's Ninth Sym-phony, his farewell to life, its closing movement unwritten. No two concert-halves could have been more contrasted. lves and Ruggles passed like brief apparitions, while, under Michael Tilson Thomas, the Bruckner was vast, solid and full of straight lines.

The almost military precision with which he marshalled this reading threw a naked light on the work. His was not the slow, inevitable unfolding of a Haitink. He drew attention to the moments when the music stops, its apparent non-sequiturs, closed doors and cul-de-sacs. This was no sense of a stream of consciousness: rather, rank upon rank of sequences, calling to mind the leaves that Bruckner counted on trees.

With an orchestra of the quality of the London Symphony, this approach can be invigorating: a restrained opening broke into a glorious smile for the song-like outpouring. Such beauty of sound and control of phrasing makes its impact, especially in the context of an impressive range of timbres.

A melodramatic gramme note warned that the Scherzo and Trio was "musical madness", but here there was a well-behaved psychopath at work. One couldn't wish for music more packed with premonition. In its terrify-

Winds were pristine, and brass, though coping with the strains imposed by Wagner tu-bas, responded splendidly. From the expansive to the soul of concision. Ives's Unaswered Question never ceases to astonish with its deft, disjunct originality. An off-stage string group intone diatonic music (here marred by sharp lower strings), a lone trumpet calls into the emptiness while four winds on stage conduct a hectic dialogue. The listener has the weird sensation of hearing three ages of music simultaneously: one rooted in Western harmony, one a Ro-mantic utterance, the last a fierce questioning of both. Ruggles's first Evocation belonged to the same world, its delicate dissonances hanging like a veil behind which the music explores itself at an unhurried pace. In the energetic arguments one could hear the influence of Schoenberg (Ruggles changed his name from Charles to Carl to sound more German). But there is freshness and modesty behind his airy, angular lines.

ven though he is a regu-lar visitor to London. the Italian pianist Maurizio Pollini never fails to fill the Festival Hall. He could probably play anything - in-deed, he has one of the widest repertoires in the business and still draw a big, adoring

But a turnout smaller than this would have been surprising, given a programme consisting of Schubert and Schumann, two gentle giants of the piano literature. These two composers also represent a log-ical way forward after Pollini's recent cycle of the complete Beethoven sonatas.

Life after Beethoven has given Pollini renewed energy and focus: some of the concerts in that epic cycle had found him slightly weary, but here he sounded fresh again, at least for most of the evening. There were a few bumpy moments in the heady finale of Schubert's Sonata in B flat, D960, and passages in the elusive first movement that may have been a little one-dimensional. But he captured this music's great humanity. Here, as in his other late piano works, Schubert was pushing the boundaries of the sonata forward. When you consider all the emotional pain he was enduring at the time, the first movement can sound miraculously calm; perhaps Pollini was justified in finding a sense of solemn foreboding here, but real calm was established only with the recapitulation, in which the opening theme reappeared transformed by what had come in between. Pollini made the sad, hesitant music of the second movement the heart of the work.

Schumann's seldom-played Allegro in B minor, Op 8, started life as the opening of a sonata, and here the form is even freer. It is really rhapsodic, a melting pot of strong and pas-sionate ideas. Pollini's interpretation was full of ardour, and each of the themes was fully characterised.

Perhaps the highlight of the evening was Schumann's Fantasie in C. Op 17, given a performance of freedom and tenderness. Parts of the opening movement found Pollini in full flood, just as he was again in the first of his encores. Chopin's Ballade No I, but he dampened things down in the eerie middle section. The imposing second movement bristled with excitement, and the introverted finale had songlike simplicity. Truly satisfying Schumann like this is the

The "modernisation" of the monarchy is about to take an intriguing new twist. The Government's constitutional reform programme has been keenly followed in Buckingham Palace. The proposals — the Human Rights Act. Lords reform. devolution and so on — swirl around the Royal Family without challenging their position. Claims that removing hereditary peers from the Lords is bound to threaten the future of the monarchy are not shared. But a potentially far-reaching. though so far largely ignored. change in the prerogative powers is about to occur in

The royal prerogative is a misnomer, since most of the powers — public appointments, ratifying treaties and the tike - are made by the Prime Minister and other ministers in the name of the Crown. Tony Benn has for long been campaigning (now with the backing of an all-party group) to make these executive prerogatives subject to parliamentary approval. But the Crown retains some personal prerogatives, notably the appointment of a Prime Minister and over the dissolution of Parliament.

tn most cases, the role of the monarch is a formality, A general election produces a clear-cut result, or a Prime Minister retires and is replaced by a leader elected by the party. But it has not always been so straightforward. Several times this century, the monarchy has been involved in controversy - including the long con-stitutional battles of 1909-11, the appoint-ment of Baldwin in 1923, the formation of the National Government in 1931, and the selection of Macmillan in 1957 and partisan arguments, rather standing above the party fray. The Tories' decision to elect their leader from 1965 onwards removed the Crown from many such situations. but not all. Four general elections since 1945 have produced no overall majority, or single-figure majorities, resulting in uncertainty about who should be Prime Minister or when a fresh election should be called. There are no public guidelines: only the overriding priority of advisers in Whitehall and Buckingham Palace not to drag the monarchy intu partisan controversy. The way out has usually been obvious. That would all change if Britain shifted from first-pastthe-post to proportional representation for the Commons. For most of the time, no party would be able to command a majority on its own. Elsewhere in Europe, lengthy negotiations often occur before coalitions are formed. Under existing British conventions. the monarchy would have to with monarchies have devised ways of protecting the Sover-eign from political involve-ment — whether through the appointment of informateurs (as in Belgium or The Netherlands) to negotiate with party leaders, or (as in Sweden) to withdraw entirely from government formation. In Britain, David Butler and Peter Hennessy have suggested the publi-cation of principles and more open consultation, though Professor Bogdanor believes that no such device could deal with unpredictable crises or conflicts of principle. Hence, the Sovereign should remain as the impartial umpire, free of party ties. I am sceptical about whether the monarchy can safeguard its essential role as a detached head of state while also a political umpire. The mystery, and some of the romance, have already gone and could not withstand the 24-hour media pressures of a constitutional crisis.

This dilemma is resolved neatly, but radically, under Clause 46 of the Scotland Act: The Parliament shall nominate one of its members for appointment as First Minister." Election would be by a series of roll-call votes, in which names would be eliminated until one candidate had the support of a simple majority. The successful candidate would be recommended by the presiding officer (or Speaker) to the Queen for ap-pointment. So the formalities of the prerogative would be preserved. The appointment ministers by the First Minister will also have to be

Riddell

This is an important constitutional innovation - very different, for example, from the old Stormont, where the Governor was involved in picking the Prime Minister of Northern Ireland. Of course, many questions remain: what happens if a coalition falls apart midway through the fixed four-year term of the parliament and there is a stalemate about electing a successor? And, as Tam Dalyell pointed out with typical sensitivity to constitutional niceties, what happens if there is conflicting advice to the Queen from the First Minister in Edinburgh and the Prime Minister in London?

Devolution is strewn with potential traps and contradicnons but the Government and Buckingham Palace have shrewdly avoided one of the most dangerous. In the process, they have created a precedent both if Westminster adopts proportional representation and when Britain moves to a more formal wrinen constitution. The monarchy is again showing itself skilful at adapting to survive.

Keep out and stay out

do not believe that Nato ought to engage in a ground war in Kosovo, and think it unlikely that it will do so. The military difficulties would be immense, the additional suffering would be terrible, the objectives would be hard to define, the outcome would be uncertain, Nato casualties might be heavy, as were American casualties in Vietnam, Russian in Afghanistan and German in Yugoslavia during the Second World War. These are reasons for thinking it would be a mistake to send in ground troops, but they are not the main reason for thinking it will not actually happen. A Balkan war would require more unity than Nato could give it.

This is not just an American war, or an Anglo-American war. It is a Nato war. The base of public support for a ground war has to be European. The more closely one examines European opinion, the clearer it becomes that the unity of Nato extends only to the bombing campaign: it could not expect to be maintained if there were a ground invasion of Yugoslavia. Two of the smaller Nato countries. Greece and Hungary, would find it polinically almost impossible to provide Nato with invasion facilities, though Hungary borders on the north Yugoslav plain, and Greece borders on the new Macedo-nia. Hungary would be inhibited by concern for the large ethnic Hungarian minority in the Vojvodina region of Serbia.

Greece has a longstanding national sympathy for Serbia, and hostility to Macedonia and Albania. The last thing Greece wants is a greater Albania. Greece initially opposed the international recognition of the new Macedonia. and remembers ethnic interventions in its own civil war. Last Thursday a crowd of several thousand threw stones at the American. British and Italian Embassies in Athens. Their slogans included "Americans, murderers of peoples" and "Greece, out of Nato".

Greece and Hungary are important because they are so close to the action, but the large European countries of France, Germany and Italy are obviously more important. Italy has a Centre-Left Government dependent on Communist votes. So far, the Italians have been willing to support the Nato bombing campaign, which has depended heavily on Italian facilities. Yet even this has been politically difficult. Like the Greeks, the Italians want an early negotiated settlement:

A ground invasion of Kosovo would

they do not want a ground war. We know most about the divided attitudes of the French Government. Le Monde, on Saturday, had a surprisingly full report of last Thursday's meeting of ministers. The three Communist ministers condemned Milosevic, but called for a rapid diplomatic solution, in line with the Russian position. The Interior Minister, Jean-Pierre Chevenement, repeated his scepticism about the Nato strategy itself. and called for UN intervention.

did, indeed, call for ground action to aide the Kosovans, because thought the bombing ineffective; other ministers sup-ported the Nato strategy, but also expressed doubts about its effective ness, Alam Richard, the Minister of Defence, gave fur-ther details of the difficulties of the Nato strategy, but assured his colleagues that patience would be rewarded The Prime Minister, Lionel Jospin. then summed up. He considered that the conduct of Milosevic justified France's stand on the side of Nato: he supported a political response through the UN, but added: "A diplomatic solution would be as difficult and complex as the military action." Le Monde's own leading article on Saturday was headed La Risque de la Défaite. The German Government has already come close to breaking Nato's apparent unity with its plan for a negotiated peace, to be based on the United Nations, and to be brokered by the Russians. This plan has been developed by Joschka Fischer, the leader of the Greens and the German Foreign Minister: it would involve a ceasefire while negoriations were being completed. The Greens, at least in Brussels, believe that the Fischer plan has been deliberately blocked by Britain and the United States. Undoubtedly the attitudes of these Governments reflect public opinion and the advice of their own defence staff. They are much influenced by concerns about Russia; the German and French Governments are in more or less continuous conversations with the Russian Government Last week the Russian Minister of Defence, Igor Sergeyev, accused Nato of preparing an imminent ground war against Yugoslavia. One of the unexpected revelations of the opening of Russian Cold War documents has been how seriously the > feared an American invasion. Russia is again very sensitive. The main European governments want Russia as a diplomatic ally for a negotiated peace. not as an arms supplier to Serbia in the middle of a war. Tony Blair has

repeated ruled out the use of ground troops, as has Al Gore, the Vice-President of the United States. That may have been a tactical mistake, in that it removed one of the pressures on Milosevic. Nevertheless, it may also have been a political necessity. Nato may simply have been unwilling to leave open the option of ground war. One of the arguments now being advanced in favour of a ground invasion is that Nato must be seen to win; this is most frequently heard in the United States. Yet it would be even more disastrous if Nato were to fall apart. A negotiated settlement, perhaps leading to the partition of Kosovo, would not destroy Nato, which has already survived the compromise over Bosnia in the Dayton accord. The power of Nato would still be there, available for defence on other threatening occasions. A split between the Nato of the Anglo-Americans and the Nato of Europe would mean that the alliance had broken up, no doubt with much ill-will on both sides. Britain herself could not enter a ground war without deep political nusgivings and division, but the Blair Government would not fall. The coalitions in power in France, Germany and ttaly would all be likely to break up on this issue, if the invasion happened.

In yesterday's Sunday Times. Bill Clinton seemed to reformulate the Nato objectives as seen from Washington. He asserted that: "The realisation of this vision will require a democratic transition in Serbia itself, for the region cannot be secure with a belligerent tyrant in its midst." This is not the existing Nato war aim, nor could it conceivably be attained without a successful and massive invasion of the whole of Yugoslavia, the forcible removal of Milosevic and the imposition of a new Constitution. The Nato bombing has already guaranteed that Milosevic would win any ordinary democratic election.

resident Clinton's new aims not only go well beyond anything that the United Nations has approved, but beyond anything Nato has approved, or would approve. If the elimination of Milosevic were made the condition for ending the war. Yugoslavia would be faced with a demand for unconditional surrender. All the European and Russian efforts to reach a negotiated settlement for the withdrawal of Serbian troops and the return of the refugees would be in vain: Nato has to negotiate with Milosevic or it will have nobody to negotiate with. The American President should not take the rest of Nato for granted.

At present, British and American opinion, shocked by the plight of the refugees, dismayed by the political ineffectiveness of the bombing. seems to be moving in favour of invasion. This movement of opinion is not shared on the Continent. I doubt if it could be relied on even here or in the United States if the troops did actually go in. The Americans are very sensitive to American casualties, and they remember Vietnam. The British have been horrified by the television pictures of human suffering, but television is a short-term, high-impact, medium in which new images constantly obliterate the old ones. At present the emotional case for a Balkan war seems very powerful. but, as Robert Walpole said of war with Spain in 1739: "They now ring the bells, but they will soon wring their hands."

At the end of winter the mood of your Russian lightens and he pulls all the insulation out of the gaps in the windows and starts doing what he does best, which is enjoy himself. Boris Yeltsin is a prime example of this. The moment the clocks went forward and the icicles began to drop off everyone's balconies (many serious injuries) he bounced back from the dead, slung around some heavy-handed hints and

Never mind all the wintry reports that the President had been having trouble walking, he practically ran into the room to sweep the unsuspecting pop star off her lect.

Suddenly everyone is making an occasion of everything. All the birthday parties held over the winter were slightly hysterical affairs at which the object was to threats, stopped the communists stave off the chill by drinking as ing huge bouquets of spring

Suddenly, under Boris Nikolayevich's command, Russia is already seeming like a friendly old bear again, the Red-Browns are beginning to look a bit foolish (their forte) and the World Bank and the IMF are putting their hands back in their pockets to help out. Most people are far too busy renovating their dachas for the summer to start messing around demonstrating and Yeltsin is far too busy effecting yet another speciacular political comeback to let them.

THETTIMES

ON TWO FRONTS

George Robertson to tougher cross-examination than they have had so far. Yesterday MPs heard Tony Blair repeat that "the important thing is to see the strategy we have through". By that he means the air war; but the more mass graves Nato identifies, the faster the Serbs empty Kosovo, the more civilians get hurt and the greater the damage to civil infrastructure, the harder it will be to present bombing as the sole means to the necessary end.

The Prime Minister and the Defence Secretary have edged towards acknowledging that; in the past few days, both have gone on record that "we keep every single ontion under review". The Foreign Secretary, by contrast, has been at pains to dampen any expectations that a land campaign is seriously in prospect. Only yesterday, he insisted that Nato would need two to three months to build up the forces required and added that the Alliance was not prepared for the heavy casualties that an opposed land offensive would entail. The Government must speak with one voice today - and the voice should be that of Mr Blair and his Defence Secretary.

Firmness and clarity of purpose are vital, because Nato is in for a longer, tougher and more ferocious war than most MPs expected four weeks ago. The campaign has to be fought on two fronts, political as well as military. The abominable forced exodus from Kosovo rallied support for Nato throughout Europe and America; but in the past few days. Nato's continued and inexcusable failure to disclose the full truth about the bombed Kosovo convoy has rendered the political front less steady.

The incident has further dented public confidence, never strong, in the efficacy of relying solely on air power to force Slobodan Milosevic to halt the atrocities and pull his forces out. In Britain, opinion

The politics of the Kosovo campaign mass.

Today's debate on Kosovo in the House of Commons will expose Robin Cook and Caorne Robertson to tougher cross-examinating troops. Ministers must be prepared publicly to address the critical question, which is whether the Alliance's so far remarkable degree of unity would crack under a change of strategy. They would be well advised not to evade it in today's debate, for this Friday in Washington. Nato's long-planned 50th anniversary summit will force the least nuance of disagreement into the open.

There is no point in pretending that none exists, within as well as between Nato governments. In Germany, the readiness of Joschka Fischer, the Foreign Minister, to override pacifist sentiment in his own Green Party has been a small political miracle; but he embarrassed EU leaders last week with a plan, which they hurriedly stifled, that included a 24-hour "negotiating pause" to the bombing. In Greece, an indispensable logistical base for any ground offensive, the Government faces a. surge of anti-Americanism. In France, President Chirac and Lionel Jospin have rallied to Nato with bipartisan determination, but lower down, the political front looks less solid. There is grumbling in Spain, where support for Nato has always been tepid. Italy's Prime Minister, Massimo D'Alema, has to deal not only with the threatened defection of hardline Communists from his coalition, but with opportunistic manoeuvring by centrists, including his Foreign Minister, Lamberto Dini.

None of this means, however, that Nato cannot hold the line, for a ground war if necessary. Western public understanding of what is at stake is clearer than it ever was over Bosnia. Signor D'Alema's popularity has risen in direct proportion to his firmness in supporting Nato; so has that of M Chirac and M Jospin. But at this critical juncture, decisive leadership is essential. If politicians falter, so too will their deeply moved but legitimately anxious voters.

NO ROOM FOR COMPROMISE

Why Britain must say a flat 'no' to an EU withholding tax

British officials left the weekend's informal meeting in Dresden of European Union finance ministers (Ecofin) saying, with relief, that it had been "the most boring Ecosin" in memory. That is just the impression that Hans Eichel, who this month succeeded Oskar Lafontaine as German Finance Minister, was out to make. But it is deceptive. Bonn and Paris have modified their tactics since Herr Lafontaine's abrupt resignation: but the strategy of EU fiscal harmonisation is unchanged, as is the French ambition to make the euro-H finance ministers the core of what the French Finance Minister, Dominique Strauss-Kahn, insists will be a "European economic government".

The benchmark by which these intentions must be judged is the EU's pernicious draft directive on the taxation of investment income. Nothing was decided at Dresden. But Gordon Brown is no closer to securing the only acceptable decision, which is to abandon it. The idea is deceptively simple - the deduction of a uniform minimum withholding tax of 20 per cent from interest payments on invested savings held by EU citizens anywhere in the Union. In theory, all EU citizens would then pay their "fair" share of taxes, no matter how or where they invested their money. The justification put forward is that tax policies must be harmonised if the single market is to work properly - which, as the differing tax policies of American state governments shows, is not true; and that the directive would combat tax evasion. What, say its advocates, could be wrong with that?

The answers are that the precedent is a bad one and that the directive's consequences, particularly for the City of London but also for EU financial services, would be appalling. Mr Brown seems ready to concede the principle of tax harmonisation. provided that he can obtain an exemption for eurobonds. Such damage limitation is not good enough. He must win both the eurobond battle and the wider war.

The City is pre-eminent in the trillionpound eurobond market, a prime target of the tax. Its imposition would cost thousands of City jobs, because the business would migrate to non-EU markets, such as Zurich, where bond trading is tax-exempt. The tax would also hurt anyone with shares in pension funds. According to the World Bank, about 70 per cent of investors in eurobonds are institutions such as pension funds. Under the EU plan the would pay withholding tax on every trade made, instead of reinvesting that money.

Capital can desert markets overnight. The City's dominance in euromarkets dates from the 1950s, when America's balance of payments deficit washed up pools of dollars in Europe. "Eurodollars" were deposited with London banks because London was a centre of currency dealing. The market settled here to stay, thanks to excess regulation elsewhere. New York, for example, lost out on eurobonds in 1963, when President Kennedy introduced a tax on foreign bond issues in the domestic dollar market. They have been vital ever since to the City's vigorous expansion.

International investors favour London not only because it has a deep pool of talented financiers, but because regulations and taxes remain benign. Adopting any EU-wide withholding tax would drive much of this business to more tax-friendly centres. British resistance to this directive has already been met by threats to end the individual national veto on tax policy. But neither this directive, nor the dilution of the veto, can be imposed without British assent. Tony Blair will be told that to use Britain's veto would discredit him as a "good European". In the interest not just of the City, but of EU financial markets, he must resist all demands for compromise.

BRIXTON'S BRAVERY

A nail bomb cannot destroy the will to live together

Randoni, terrifying violence on a busy shopping street is the hallmark of the terrorist and the psychopath. In Ulster, culminating in the atrocity in Omagh, it has become wearily familiar. But on the mainland it is still thankfully rare, despite the growing tendency of extremists to exploit the publicity that horror brings. Brixton is the latest community to suffer. The nail bomb that on Saturday left at least 48 people injured, some seriously, was timed to explode when it would cause the greatest carnage. When the ceasefire in Ulster is holding, however precariously. outrage will be particularly keen.

So far, no group has claimed responsibility. Speculation has focused on a lone attacker, possibly similar to, or even inspired by, the so-called Mardi Gra bomber. There is also the likelihood of a racist motive. Given Brixton's ethnic mix. anyone wishing to stir up racial hatred, or to take perverted revenge on the black community in the wake of the Stephen Lawrence report, might have chosen this South London symbol of black Britain to detonate a parcel bomb of hatred.

What is clear is the courage and quick thinking of all those caught up in the incident. Years of vigilance and familiarity with bomb warnings have taught people to avoid suspicious packages. The man who spotted what looked like a bomb and calmly carried the holdall to a wall where it would do less harm heroically risked his life in an attempt to save others. The police who ran towards the explosion and the passers-by who rushed in to help the injured did what they humanly could, ignoring their own shock and the risk of a second device going off. As the ambulances were on their way, people were already offering first aid and comfort.

Brixton is a resilient place, however. It has had to be. With more than its fair share of troubles in the past 30 years, it has learnt to turn adversity to its advantage. Lacking wealth, jobs and beauty, Brixton has seen race riots and race hatred, police brutality and police victimisation, segregation and prejudice. There have been national inquiries and government resolutions. But since 1981, the district has fought back. Urban regeneration, imaginative integration initiatives, the kindling of ethnic pride amid racial diversity have made Brixton now a symbol more of hope than of deprivation. No wonder Nelson Mandela asked to go there. Its streets hum with life; no deranged terrorist can destroy their vibrant variety.

From Mr David Davis, MP for Haltemprice and Howden (Conservative), and others

Sir, You report (April 12) the conflicting results of opinion polls about business attitudes to economic and monetary union. Yet it will be the people who will decide this crucial issue, not the business community, and public opposition to replacing the pound by the euro is being underestimated.

Peter Riddell has rightly noted (article, March I) that some recent polls have featured "a slightly altered question". However, the only objective way to assess changes, if any, in public opinion is to ask the identical basic question repeatedly.

On October 2 and 3, 1998, an tCM poll commissioned by Julian Lewis, MP, asked: "Do you think that Britain should replace the pound with the single European currency?" Thirtytwo per cent replied "Yes"; 56 per cent replied "No".

·However, on February 11 The Guardian newspaper claimed that its own ICM poll showed that "support in Britain to join the euro has surged to its highest ever level, with 36 per cent in favour and 52 per cent oppo-sed. This poll made no reference to replacing the pound.

ICM was immediately commissioned to repeat the question, with the October 1998 wording. The fieldwork was carried out between March 5 and 7, before the resignation of the European Commission. This time the results were 30 per cent "Yes" and 60 per cent

This shows that public opinion has. if anything, become more hostile to EMU over the past six months, and that findings to the contrary during this period are likely to have resulted from changes in the wording of poll questions, not in public opinion itself.

Yours faithfully, DAVID DAVIS, SYDNEY CHAPMAN. ERIC FORTH, MICHAEL SPICER House of Commons.

From the Chief Executive of Business for Sterling

Sir, Your report, "business moves in favour of euro in new poll" (April 12), featured the results of a survey which not only sampled just 200 firms, but also excluded the 95 per cent of Britain's 3.7 million businesses which have less than El million turnover.

The survey we commissioned from ICM, showing that 63 per cent of businesses are opposed to the euro (report, March 31), is the only one to survey all business, and its sample of 1,000 is the biggest. Your report's assertion that this poll "overemphasised" the views of smaller businesses is simply wrong. The overall results were correctly weighted to mirror the structure of the whole business community. Unweighted, they overrepresented big business by a factor of 50. The CBI and Britain in Europe are defending an increasingly desperate position. Minutes of the CBI's economic affairs committee meeting in July 1998 reveal that they ruled out "a completely random survey of businesses. which would be the ultimate gauge of firms' attitudes to UK membership of EMU", on the ground that "complication might, however, arise in reconciling the survey results with the existing CBI position if the outcome turned out to be less pro-EMU". They opted instead to encourage a Finanial Times survey in association with MORI, which again excluded small business from the sample (letters, November 30 and December 3, 1998).

In his Budget speech the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that small busi-nesses were "the very firms whose growth will create the greatest number of new jobs". These businesses are responsible for a growing share of national employment. It is no longer acceptable for pollsters or those who represent business to ignore their

During my preclinical course at Jesus College, Cambridge, I had the pleasure of tutorials with Professor Duckworth, the founder of the collection from which came the hairs of Andaman islanders studied by Dr Hagelberg.

I am certain that the late Professor Duckworth, who was the medically qualified Professor of Anatomy, would have been delighted that his old (and now probably dusty) specimens could still make a valuable contribution to scientific research.

The objection to Dr Hagelberg's work from the present director of the collection, and his Iudicrous appeal to political correctness, seem unworthy.

Opinion polls and Tragedy funds 'perpetuate grief'

From Mt Geoffrey Morgan

Sir, I was saddened about the service of remembrance to those who died at Hillsborough (report, April 16). Everyone experiences the loss of a loved one through death. The rituals of mourning enable those left behind to recover from their loss and continue with their lives.

It is more difficult where others share grief in the same circumstances Hillsborough, Aberfan, Lockerbie, etc. The pursuit of "justice" or "the truth" by the relatives seems to me a means to perpetuate grief and per-haps avoid responsibilities to the

At the time of the Aberian pit tragedy in October 1966 monetary compensation for the loss of a child was fixed at £500. The disaster fund persuaded the Charity Commission to allow us to pay £5,000 per person, regardless of personal circumstance, including age.

What purpose does money serve in these circumstances other than to sow dissension? Usually a small sum can compensate for the material loss in a disaster. The rest of the money, which is the only way the public can express their natural grief and wish to do something to belp, can cause more trauma.

At the time of the Bradford football fire disaster in May 1985. I offered my services to the newly appointed trus-tee and discussed what I perceived as the Aberfan fund's failings. The Bradford fund did not seek charitable status and whatever grants were made to beneficiaries remained confidential.

When it was wound up I complimented the trustee on the speed, skill and compassion with which its work had been completed with an almost total absence of controversy. He was kind enough to observe that he had taken on board the discussion we had had previously and avoided the mistakes made at Aberian.

Let the dead rest in peace.

Yours faithfully, GEOFFREY MORGAN (Secretary/Treasurer, Aberfan Disaster Fund, 1969-71), Rose Cottage, Southampton SO32 2NP.

British citizenship

From Mr Robert Purdie

Sir, The British Nationality Act 1981 (letters, April 7 and 12) discriminates against men. A British father can only pass on British citizenship if he is married to the mother of his child. A British mother can always pass on British citizenship to her children (whether full citizenship or citizenship by descent).

The European Convention on Nationality, which has been open for signature since November 6, 1997, attempts to introduce conformity in the internal law of the member states of the Council of Europe on nationality and can be seen as an extension of the right to family life enshrined in the European Convention on Human Rights. Article 5 of the nationality convention prohibits discrimination on various grounds, including sex. As yet, the United Kingdom has not signed nor ratified this convention.

Yours faithfully, ROBERT PURDIE. 28 Western Road, Oxford OXI 4LG.

From Mr Paul Reichelt

Sir, Mr Michael Pickett's clarification (letter, April 12) of current nationality laws highlights my family difficulties.
As a UK-based civil servant in the Air Ministry, I served a four-year tour of duty in Singapore in the late 1950s. While overseas, officers and families used some of the facilities provided by and available to the RAF. My twins. born at the British Military Hospital in Singapore in 1957 were registered at the colony's registrar's offices in accordance with my department's instructions.

Teachers' pay

From the Minister of State at the Department for Education and Employment Sir, Mrs Theresa May, MP, the Shadow Schools Minister, claims (letter. April 12) that the Government's plans for teacher pay reform represeni a "centrally controlled, bureaucratic, mechanistic approach ... which could take good teachers out of the classroom". The Government believes that head teachers should play the most important role in our new system - which is about rewarding good teachers and keeping them in the classroom. External assessors will ensure, in its initial stages particularly, that the system is fair and rigorous. We want bureaucracy kept to a minimum. The heads' unions have been willing to be constructive in offering practical suggestions.

Unfortunately, as your editorial of April 7 indicated, the Conservatives seem to be supporting those unions which are against any link between pay and performance.

Yours faithfully, ESTELLE MORRIS. Department for Education and Employment, Sanctuary Buildings. Great Smith Street. Westminster SWIP 3BT. April 12.

From Mr Frank Wood

Sir, David Blunkett and the Government show little understanding of teachers and the way the education system works. From 43 years' experience connected with education here and overseas, either as a teacher or an author of textbooks, I confidently predict that in the majority of cases the "merit rises" would not go to the best teachers. They would go to the cronies of the headmaster.

Timetabling would be such as to show these cronies in the best possible light. Those who flattered the head would get priority. Good teachers who did not see eye to eye with authority would get short shrift.

The result - a demoralised workforce and lower standards of teaching.

Yours faithfully, FRANK WOOD, 58 Andrew Lane. High Lane, Stockport SSK6 8HX.

Ludwells Lane, Waltham Chase, geaf@cgmorgan.freeserve.co.uk In their late teens, my son's and daughter's applications for individual temporary British passports, for overseas school trips, were initially re-fused. The reason: no British birth certificate. Proof of my nationality and an interview with the local passport office finally led to acceptance. Later applications for permanent passports led to similar resistance. For some, my surname attracts immediate doubts to nationality. I find it hard to believe that all children born overseas to members of the Forces and UK-based civil servants had similar problems when applying for passports. After marriage my daughter's passport applications were unques-

From Mrs Bette Brien

Sir. Jack Straw says there should be public celebrations for people becoming new citizens of the UK (report, April 13). About seven years ago I held a large party at an art gallery in Tomes to celebrate my "naturalisation papers". I was very proud to become a British citizen and the gallery was draped with flags. Live musicians and champagne were part of the festivi-

However, I will not celebrate becoming a citizen of Europe of enjoy giving up sterling. I came to Britain 40 years ago and feel more British than the British. I love it here!

Smack of authority

From the Chief Executive of Barnardo's

Sir. We were more than a little surprised to be singled out for criticism by The Freedom Association (letter, April 10) for our commitment to the 'Children are unbeatable" alliance. This alliance, which consists of over 200 separate organisations and numerous individual childcare experts. has a stated objective of promoting positive discipline for children rather than advocating that parents be criminalised. A recent MORI poll showed that 73 per cent of people support law reform to protect children against physical assault, where they can be sure parents will not then be prosecuted for trivial smacks. Our policy, which has been approved by Barnardo's trustees, stems from the need to protect vulnerable children from physical violence and is clearly in line with Barnardo's stated objectives.

Yours sincerely, ROGER SINGLETON. Chief Executive, Barnardo's. Tanners Lane, Barkingside, Ilford, Essex IG6 IQG. April 14.

From Mr Peter W. S. Baines

Sir, Philip Howard (article, April 16) is wrong to view the charges of the Light and Heavy Brigades at Balaclava in the same negative light.

In contrast to the infamous fate that befell Cardigan's brigade in "the Valley of Death", the Heavy Brigade suffered few casualties in one of the greatest and most audacious cavalry charges in military history.

Mr Howard's claim that the cavalry "never delivered on the battlefield" is magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la

From Mr Alan Blyth

Sir, I am seriously concerned by Nicholas Snowman's plans for Glyndebourne and your editorial support for them (article, "Fasten your cummerbands ... ", and leading article, April 14). Works such as Otello, Tristan und Isolde, Wozzeck and Birtwistle's Mask of Orpheus, heavy fare by any standard, have been and should continue to be the province of the major companies in London, whose work Glyndebourne will simply be duplicat-

Glyndebourne should continue to present, as its core repertory, its supreme Mozart, rehearsed in a manner not possible at more cash-strapped houses, along with early opera, rare Handel and Rossini and little-known Czech repertory (no shortage of masterpieces to be explored in any of these areas), works not available elsewhere in this country and ideal fare for a summer evening in the Sussex

Downs. Are we really never to see and hear again in the house such joys as Handel's Theodora and Rossini's Le Comte Ory? I hope not. Having worked in subsidised surroundings for most of his career, Snowman per-haps forgets that Glyndebourne has to provide a fare that will please its public, not give us some "radical-chic" concept out of kilter, in my view, with the intentions of Glyndebourne's

Yours faithfully. ALAN BLYTH. 22 Shilling Street Lavenham, Suffolk CO10 9RH.

From Mr Robin Howard

Sir, Nicholas Snowman appears to have excellent plans for the repertory. but will he please give his attention also to the availability of tickets?

When the new opera house was opened it was stated that a greater proportion of seats would be available to the public, as opposed to members. My wife and I, having always immensely enjoyed our visits, were most disappointed this year when, although on the mailing list, we were informed that all tickets for all performances of The Bartered Bride had been sold before public booking could commence.

As this was the only production we wished to see, we shall have to forgo our visit to Glyndebourne this year.

Yours faithfully, ROBIN HOWARD, New Timbers, 8 Upfield, Croydon CR0 5DP.

Trafalgar Square plinth

From Mr L. A. Yeats

Sir, King Charles I lost his head in Whitehall. Anyone wanting to see his statue on its island at the junction of Whitehall and Trafalgar Square at close quarters risks injury of a less permanent but nevertheless damaging nature from the never-ending flow

A solution to the problem of the empty plinth on the other side of the square (news in brief, April 10) would be to move King Charles. This would make it easier for people to see one of London's best pieces of statuary, relieve traffic congestion by removing the need for the island and place the King in close proximity to statues of his succeeding relatives - his son James II, George III and George IV history and genealogy lessons com-

It would also have the advantage of obviating the need to commission a new statue (a good thing given the dire quality of some recent London statues and monuments), thereby saving money.

Millennium babies

From Mr Douglas J. Bugler

Sir, The recent talk about planning for a millennium baby (reports. March 23, 27 and April 6) reminds us that without any planning or thought on the subject (other than the usual ones) our son was born on September 9, 1949, as, no doubt, were many others.

This year will see their 50th birthdays on 9.9.1999, which just goes to show how clever you can be when you leave it to nature.

Yours faithfully, D. J. BUGLER, 5 Winston Court. Lymington Road, New Milton, Hampshire BH25 6PG. April II.

Nature notes

SEDGE warblers are back from Africa and singing their rich. babbling soog in reedbeds and willows. They usually skulk out of sight, but sometimes throw themselves up into the air to sing. They can be distinguished from reed warblers, which will also soon be arriving, by their bright vellow eye-stripes. Hobbies are back on heaths and lonely farmland: they are small, fast-flying hawks that feed on dragonflies or on birds they can catch in the air, such as house-martins. Skylarks are nesting in corn and grass: they may be found on any broad open space from moorland to golf courses and

LORD CAYZER

Lord Cayzer, Chairman of British and Commonwealth Shipping. 1958-87, and of Caledonia Investments, 1958-94. died on April 16 aged 89. He was born on January 21, 1910.

or many years one of the basoons of the City's ship-ping community. Nicholas Cayzer was the grandson of Sir Charles Cayzer, 1st Baronet, the founder of Clan Line Steamers, whose merger with Union Castle led to the creation of British and Commonwealth Shipping in 1955. The years of Nicholas Cayzer's stewardship were ones of steady decline in the British shipping industry. At the turn of the century half the world's merchant ships had flown the Brirish flag and even in 1950 Britain still had 30 per cent of the ships affoat.

By 1960 that figure was down to 15 per cent and ten years later stood at II per cent. The next decade saw an acceleration in the decline and by the end of it the figure was down to below 5 per cent.

But Cayzer was a shrewd businessman as well as a proud shipowner. During his chairmanship he oversaw a diversification by British and Commonwealth into a broad spread of business interests, investing in office equipment, financial services, hotels and air transport. By the end of this period shipping formed a very minor part of British and Commonwealth's business. The 100-ship fleet it had inherited from the merger of Clan Line and Union Castle was down to

Finally, in the summer of 1987 Caledonia Investments, the financial vehicle of the Cayzer family, withdrew all but a small proportion of its longstanding investment in British and Commonwealth, receiving more than £300 million

Hence, Caledonian and the personal fortune of the Cayzer family were untouched by the events of "Black Monday", the stock market crash of October 1987, which left British and Commonwealth in severe difficulties.

Earlier that year Cayzer had been named the ninth richest man in Britain by a survey in Elite magazine, with a fortune estimated at £500 million.

William Nicholas Cayzer was born at Mauchline, Ayrshife, the son of Sir August Cayar, 1st Baronet. Himself the third son of Sir Charles Cayzer, August Cayzer had been created a baronet in 1921. Charles Cayzer, who had bought his first merchant ship. Clan Alpine, in 1878, had been created a baronet in 1904.

for a brief period was in the Army. But it was clear that his shipping knowhow would be much more valuable to the war effort than his eye behind the sights of a rifle could, and he was soon brought back to the firm to help with the organisation of convoys. He succeeded to the baronetcy on his father's death in 1943. He was chairman of the Liverpool Steam Ship Owners' Association, 1944-45, Liverpool being Clan Line's home

In 1948, on the death of Major Harold Cayzer, he became vice-chairman of Clan Line under his uncle, the 1st Lord Rotherwick, and in 1955 he took a leading part in the negotiations which led to the merger of Clan Line with the Union Castle Mail Steamship Co to form British and Commonwealth Shipping. On the death of Lord Rotherwick in 1958, he became chairman of the new company. Thereafter, in addition to his Commonwealth Shipping, he was president of the Chamber of Ship-ping and chairman of the General Council of British Shipping, as well as being president of the Institute of Marine Engineers, 1963-64.

He was also a member of the Mersey Dock and Harbour Board and of the National Dock Labour Board. As such he frequently had to deal with the increasingly intractable labour problems which beset the shipping industry. He was created a life peer in 1982.

After selling his family's interests in British and Commonwealth in 1987 and stepping down as chair-man. Cayzer continued as chairman of Caledonia Investments until 1994 when he became president of the company. In retirement he continued to be an enthusiastic golfer and was a fine shot.

Nicholas Cayzer married, in 1935, Elizabeth Catherine, daugh-ter of Owain Williams. She died in 1995 and he is survived by their two seemed that the future of long-range air travel lay in the flying boat rather than in airliners operating from land. Taffy Powell undertook transatlantic flights' as Imperial Airways sought to develop its long-distance routes. Later, after war had broken out, he returned to the RAF where he had started his flying career, and played an important role in the development of Ferry Command which systema-tised the delivery of the vast numbers of aircraft which had to be brought across the Atlantic from American factories for use in the European Griffith James Powell was born in Cardiff. He had originally intended to be an engineer, and for that purpose went to Bristol University. But Bristol, with its famous aircraft company, sparked an interest in flying and in 1926 he joined the RAF, where the metamorphosis of Griffith to Taffy was very soon accomplished - and the nickname stuck fast. His first posting was to No 58 Squadron, then commanded by Arthur (later Bomber 1 Harris. Even then. the fiery Harris was firmly convinced of the efficacy of night bombing, and No 58 got

When war came in 1939 Powell tried to rejoin the RAF but was told that at 32 he was too old for active service. A chance meeting with an old RAF messmate led to his joining the Royal Canadian Air Force, where he became a navigation specialist with Eastern Air Command, providing air cover for Atlantic convoys. With the ordering of a large number of American-built Hudson bombers by Britain to on a series of transatlantic proving flights in the Short C Class flying boal Cambria increase the effectiveness of convoy protection, it became imperative to devise a systematic air ferry system to get the aircraft from their factories in California to RAF Coastal Command's bases. Within a few months the Imperial Airways transatlantic team of 1937 had reassembled in Canada to form the Atlantic Ferry Organisation (Aftero), and Powell had been disentangled from the RCAF and put in charge of the ferry system's forward base at Gander, Newfoundland. He subsequently became operations controller of Aftero. On November 10, 1940, the first squadron of Hudsons, led by Don Bennett (later to found the Pathfinder Force) left America and all arrived safely in Britain. The first span of the Atlantic air bridge was in place. Powell was subsequently posted back to Bermuda to establish another link, the delivery of Catalina flying boats to Greenock on the Clyde, a flight which often took the slow-flying Catalina

24 hours. In June 1941 Aftero became RAF Ferry Command (in 1943 its name changed again, to 45 Group Transport Command) and undertook all the transport and communications tasks associated with the mass of aircraft pouring into Britain as the war proceeded and the invasion of Europe loomed. The ferry operation also supplied aircraft for the Desert Air Force and anti-tank ammunition for the 8th Army in North Africa. In June 1943 Powell was reinstated in the RAF with the rank of air commodore and appointed ferry operation had delivered more than 9,000 aircraft, losing only 74 in the process.

After the war Powell returned to civilian life and set up British Aviation Services, a ferry organisation which delivered war surplus transport aircraft to the rapidly growing commercial airline sector. When BAS became Silver City Airways, Powell became its managing director. Familiar in the 1950s for its car ferry service in bulb-nosed Bristol Freighters between Lympne and Le Touquet, Silver City Airways started life doing something very different. In the fraught months of the partition of India and Pakistan it was involved in the mass airlifting of Hindus and Muslims between the two countries. At its peak in 1984 Silver City was carrying 40,000 cars and 100,000 passengers a and 100,000 passengers a year. On one single July day that year Silver City aircraft crossed the Channel 222 times. In 1957 Powell stepped down from his post at Silver City, which had by then been taken over by P&O, but within a few months was back in harness as BOAC director of the troubled subsidiary. British troubled subsidiary, British West Indian Airlines. He subsequently moved to Nassau as chairman and managing director of Bahamas Airways before finally retiring to the South of France, where he had lived quietly for the past thirty

SIR IAN McADAM

Sir Ian McAdam, OBE. surgeon, died on March 4 aged 82. He was born oo February 15, 1917.

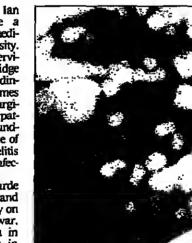

LAN McADAM inspired a generation of tropical surgeons by his charismatic leadership, outstanding teaching skills and surgical gifts. During his time in Uganda, from 1946 to 1972, he played a leading role in the develop-ment of Mulago Hospital and the Makerere University Medical School in Kampala, creating a centre of excellence which not only served the needs of developing Africa but attracted surgeons and surgical trainees from all parts of the globe. His expulsion by Idi Amin was a sign of the destruction that was to come.

lan William James McAdam was born in South Africa. the second of four sons of a mining engineer, who had gone out originally to serve with the British forces in the Boer War and who settled eventually in Shabani, Southern Rhodesia, where he managed the asbestos mine. All four brothers served in turn as head boy at Plumtree School. Southern Rhodesia.

From an early age lan McAdam wanted to be a surgeon, so he studied medicine at Edinburgh University. Following a period as supervisor in anatomy at Cambridge University he returned to Edinburgh to work with Sir James Learmonth as the Wilkie Surgical Research Fellow, participating in the excitement surrounding the early successful use of penicillin to treat osteomyelitis and invasive bacterial infec-

As senior surgical specialist to the Ugandan Government he was on occasion the only surgeon at Mulago, the main government hospital in Kampala and the forerunner of the showpiece hospital which came into being at the time of independence.

The wealth of surgical experience he now acquired laid the foundation for the skills as a teacher of the art, science and craft of surgery for which he became world renowned. He was duly appointed to the a surgical teacher. His teaching rounds on the wards were legendary, the knowledge being imparted in a manner which challenged but never ridiculed. His abiding commitmen! to the training of doctors gave the school a growing reputation as a source of graduates able to work in the remote communities and isolated hospitals of East Africa.

The first generation of East African surgeons were trained in his department. McAdam also encouraged the establishment of other medical schools in the region. Many of his trainees returned to develop prominent roles in the surgical services of their own countries.
Although McAdam would not have claimed to be a prominent scientist and surgical research worker, he knew quality science when he saw it, made major contributions to the development of clinical surgery and created an environment in which research could flourish. He was involved with the establishment of the Uganda Blood Transfusion Service, the Polio Treatment Centre and the Cancer Institute, was a founder member and later the president of the East African Association of Surgeons, and in 1975 was awarded the John Bruce Medal by the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. McAdam was deeply committed to the development of a multiracial society in Uganda and strove to ensure that the new hospital did not perpetuate the folly of an earlier system in which the Kampala hospitals were segregated according to the racial origin of their patients.

He found time for many activities outside surgery, representing Uganda at several sports, including tennis, cricket and golf, and winning national titles at golf, tennis and motor rallying. Other hobbies included photography, gardening and a deep less of the African burb and love of the African bush and its wildlife. His first marriage ended in divorce in 196t. Six years later he was married for the second time, to Pamela Hunt Inée Medawar), and their home in Kampala was a haven of hospitality. When President Obote was shot in the head, McAdam operated — but only after soldiers brandishing automatic weapons had been cleared from the immediate confines of the operating theatre. But he was to fall foul of another President. It was a cruel day for Uganda when in 1972 he was expelled by Idi Amin. along with the professors of medicine and obstetrics. Among the reasons cited were the efforts of the three to help Asian colleagues to find posts overseas. He could hardly have been happy to remain under that regime.

After a year at the National Cancer Institute in Washington, the call of Africa and its big skies proved more alluring than a number of job offers in the northern hemisphere. The McAdams settled near Plettenburg Bay in South Africa. where he undertook all the surgery at the Knysna Hospital, operating until he was 72. He retired to Middleton Stoney. Oxfordshire, in 1992 after 65 years in Africa, moving recently to Devon to be closer to his immediate family. McAdam was knighted in 1966 for services to Uganda. He had been appointed OBE in 1957.

He is survived by his wife Pamela and by the children of his first marriage, two daughters and a son who is a professor of tropical medicine.

workers were involved, and the miners in every country were bound up in the struggle. They had reached a stage when it was not a mere wage issue that was involved. Even the biggest Tory now would say there must be a change somewhere. The Prime Minister could not afford to ignore the Miners' Federation. One miner was worth more than 12 Bishops; the Bishops got the money and the miner got the work. The miner never got one increase in wages voluntarily. Was there anybody there This was no ordinary crisis. All the dull enough to believe that the Govern-

The miners must make up their minds that they were not going to retreat any more. They had got the whole trade union movement in the country pledged to defend the miners' hours, wages, and national agreements. Abroad they had made arrangements that no coal should come into this country. "My last word" to the Government." said Mr. Cook, "is 'Count the cost'. The cost of a strike of the miners would mean the end of capitalism. Let me warn the Government that there is a new mentality in the police, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. Ninety-seven per cent, of the recruits for the past two years have come from the working classes, and thousands of them miners. who will not shoot against their kith and kin when the order comes, and we shall not be afraid to advise them. VIALLI'S ERROR BRINGS DOWN CURTAIN ON TITLE CHALLENGE

Chelsea's bubble bursts

THEY loaded their players with honours before the game. Ed de Goey got his from one branch of the supporters' club; Gustavo Poyet got his from another. They even gave one to Frank Sinclair, a visiting old boy, just for being there. Sadly for Chelsea, once they had started dispensing largesse yesterday, they could not stop. For 80 minutes, they dominated Leicester City; for 80 minutes, they cruised towards a comfortable victory that would have brought them back to within a point of Manchester United at the top of the FA Carling Premiership, with everything still to play for and the pressure bearing down on the leaders.

Then, as they patted them-selves on the back a bit more, Gianluca Vialli, their playermanager, made a dreadfully misjudged substitution that turned the game and, before they knew it, they had given away something far more precious than any of the trinkets that they had parted with

In five minutes of madness near the end of a season of toil and perseverance, Chelsea threw away a two-goal lead and, with it, their hopes of winning the title for another year. If ever a draw felt like a crushing defeat, this was it.

Their second draw in five days left them three points behind United, but Alex Ferguson's side have a game in hand. For Chelsea to win the championship now. United would probably have to lose two of their last six games when they have only lost three of their previous 32. It is between United and Arsenal his face set like stone as he disappeared down the Stamford Bridge tunnel after the final whistle. He would not speak to the media, but Graeme Le Saux gave a hint of the stmosphere in the dressing-room. "Do not try to interview Luca under any circumstances," the defender said with a wry smile.

Vialli does not attend press conferences any more anyway, but Ray Wilkins, Rix's successor as first-team coach. admitted that the championship had probably slipped out of reach. "That makes it very difficult for us now," Wilkins said. "We have got five games left and we have got to win . them all to stand any chance of winning the title. Then we just have to hope the others slip

Their challenge appears to have foundered, ultimately, on their failure to replace Pierluigi Casiraghi, injured early in the season, with a goalscorer of a similar calibre, someone who could have finished Leicester off yesterday when they were at Chelsea's mercy.

They had eased their way into the lead in the thirtieth minute, when Gianfranco ler after a fine pass from Jody Morris and an even finer one from Roberto Di Matteo had carved open the Leicester defence. They nearly went farther ahead ten minutes after half-time, but Keller somehow managed to claw a diving header from Dennis Wise off the line when it seemed that it was impossible to keep it out.

They did extend their lead midway through the second half. Di Matteo was the provider once more. His pass freed Dan Petrescu on the right and when his chip over Keller bounced off the post, Matt Ellion could only turn it into his own net. Demoralised and outplayed. Leicester should not have been allowed any way back.

RUGBY LEAGUE: LEADERS STRUGGLE BEFORE MAINTAINING 100 PER CENT RECORD AGAINST SHEFFIELD'S STEEL

St Helens..... Sheffield Eagles...

By CHRISTOPHER IRVINE

IF ELLERY HANLEY had hair to tear out, it would have come away in clumps. The SI Helens coach is not one for emotional responses, but his side put him and a crowd of 9,000 at Knowsley Road through the wringer yesterday before maintaining their 100 per cent record, two points clear at the top of the JJB Super League.

Hanley was brief and to the point: "I'd like to apologise on behalf of the players for that lacklustre performance. There was very little quality. We were lucky to scrape two points. Our one-on-one deence was bad from the first minute to the last." St Helens were assisted by a

5-6 penalty count. John Kear. the Sheffield Eagles coach. stopped short of directly critcising Karl Kirkpatrick, the refe-ree, but said: "It was ridicu-lous. I'll be glad to see Greg McCallum [the referees director) back from Australia. Nobody can beat St Helens with the little ball we had in the second half."

In all of their six league wins, St Helens have come from behind. When Sheffield opened the scoring through Powell's try on the right after nine minutes, the home side went into overdrive, with an unanswered burst of 20 points, before conceding two quick, converted tries by Sodje and Hardy and a penalty from halfway by Aston, after Long's dreadful restart, in the five minutes before the break.

The place-kicking of Long. who landed seven goals, settled St Helens, whose complacency then threatened them again as Sheffield rallied once more towards the finish. "We let ourselves down. There's a lot of hard work to do," Hanley said.

After three successive victo-ries, the Eagles had their tail feathers up. Jeff Hardy moved out of the pack and had a magnificent game opposite Aston at half back. The Sheffield forwards never stopped working, but with penalties running so comprehensivly against them. a late runaway try by Turner and three further Aston goals were insufficient.

For the 20 minutes after Powell's opening try, St Hel-ens did as they pleased. They imagined that they were strolling to victory when Long initi-ated the first try by Kevin Iro after the referee played advantage. Tacklers failed to pull Iro down a second time and the strapping New Zea-land centre brought Atcheson, whose performance was the only outstanding one, on to the ball for Paul Wellens to brush off a poor challenge by Lovell beneath the posts.

The game looked to be running away from Sheffield when Iro tore downfield and the defence melted. Why be opted to throw a pass when scoring looked easier was anyone's guess, but the ball was whipped out to the left and Keiron Cunningham found a big gap from acting half back. Room opened up for Sonny Nickle to add a fourth try. Missed tackles by Iro and Cunningham led to Sheffield scores when Sodje and Hardy supported clean breaks. What-ever Hanley said at half-time did not work immediately. Long and Aston exchanged two penalties each, before the eventual breakthrough for St Helens, by Stewart.

Hughes tames Broncos

Wakefield Trinity Wildcats..40 London Broncos....

By A CORRESPONDENT

UNLESS London Broncos can beat, or at worst draw, with Warrington Wolves at The Stoop on Saturday, they will go into the Silk Cup Challenge Cup final against Leeds Rhinos on the back of four JJB Super League defeats. Yesterday they were trounced by seven tries to one on their trip to Wakefield Trinity Wildcars at Belle Vue.

Three first-half tries from Adam Hughes, the Wakefield centre. in an inspired 21-minute spell totally undermined the Broncos' resolve. Hughes went on to embellish his performance with some excellent goalkicking to finish with 24 points. London badly missed the guiding hand of Shaun Edwards. Threatening individual sorties by Peters and Rvan never seemed likely to achieve the success of Wakefield's collective effort in which Tomlinson's skill, Law's pace and the forward power of March and Poching gave them a massive advantage. Not that Wakefield began too convincingly. They were behind to a Tollett penalty after two minutes and it was against the run of play that Tomlinson conjured up the opening try for Hughes. A superb diagonal run earned him his second and Law made the third after Tollett had scored the sole try for the Broncos. This vulnerability down the left side continued to prove an Achilles's heel for the Broncos, although it was from a full frontal assault that Poching joined Hughes on the scoring

Disorganisation led to indiscipline in the London ranks and when Hammond was sent to the sin-bin, Wakefield took full advantage to add further tries through Kenward and McDonald. Stott added number seven after Offiah, who had a wretched game, failed to deal with a kick from high and, on this evidence, neither is far off course. Bradford showed that they have the strength to challenge for the top honour and Warrington that they have the spirit to upset many of the leading lights. The muddy conditions meant that the game was always going to be a hard slog that would be decided more by errors than tries, so it was no surprise that the result hinged on a mistake. The teams were level at 14-14 when Warrington spilled possession in front of their own posts and Bradford mounted the attack that brought the decisive try. It came ten minutes from the end of a contest that Bradford should have won long before then. Instead, they were denied by some solid Warrington defence, particularly in the first half, which ended with the teams level at 8-8. James Lows, the Bradford-

Instead, they stunned Bradford with a try by Lee Penny on the stroke of half-time and Warrington were all square.

A defensive error by War-rington, when they failed to deal with Henry Paul's clever kick ahead early in the second half, enabled Scott Naylor to score the Bulls' third try, only for Warrington to come back strongly, Mark Forster taking advantage of some slack work in the Bradford defence. It looked as though that would be enough to earn Warrington a point, but that late error by the home team allowed Lows to set up David Boyle for the winning try

Newcastle stuck on the road to nowhere

BY NICHOLAS HARLING

NEWCASTLE Eagles may well have to change their travel arrangements if ever they are to make a realistic attempt 10 reach Wembley. The squad defeated 87-68 by London Towers on Saturday was the same as that beaten 91-76 only 48 hours earlier at the same Crystal Palace venue.

In between the last two legs of their Budweiser Championship quarter-final play-off, the Eagles had made the long journey back to the North East. Barely had the players gol to bed in the small hours ol Friday Ihan they were embarking on the 800-mile round trip again.

"It's crazy, isn't it." Craig Lynch, the coach, said, "It's unfortunate to have two quick games like this but money is lways a factor in this league. However the game was impor-tant enough for us not to use tiredness as an excuse."

Fatigue had not looked a problem early on in the decisive final game when the Ea-gles hit the first eleven points and moved serenely into a 26-8 advantage.

Only then did they succumb once more to the accuracy of Randy Duck. The American. the latest acquisition for the Towers who have now reached Wembley three years running at Newcastle's ex-pense, collected 24 points in both the Palace games. Martin Henlam also scored 20 points on Saturday. By half-time, when they led 43-38, the Towers had taken complete control and thereafter they encountered few problems.

It was a similar story in the Nynex Arena where Manchester Giants knocked out Birmingham Bullets, the holders. 90-77, in their decisive third leg. The Bullets would have been happier with their earli-er 13-5 lead had Reggie Kirk already accumulated three fouls.

Kirk finished with 18 points, one more than Nigel Lloyd, but in Tony Dorsey, the scorer of 30 points, the Giants had the overwhelming match winner. The Bullets hardly needed reminding that Dorsey was the man voted most valuable player when they lifted the Trophy last May. Manchester's Wembley op ponents will be Thames Valley Tigers, runners-up last year. In the other semi-final the Towers will meet Sheffield Sharks who stayed oo course for a remarkable treble by winning their third leg 75-68 against Greater London Leopards on Friday to leave the capital club, league champions for the past two seasons. without any silverware this

Terrell Myers made the vital contribution for the Sharks with 25 points of which 13 came in the final quarter, to douse a Leopards' post-interval rally.

In fact, there could be a distinct physical advantage in Jackman's main match of the tournament being brought forward 24 hours in a crowded five-day schedule, plus, perhaps, a psychological help in meeting Martin the day after the world No I had been unexpectedly overturned by her fellow Australian.

Flintstone's form favours

RODNEY POWELL, the winner of Badminton in 1991, underlined his form for the event this year when he and Marguerite Boucher's Flintstone relegated Blyth Tait and Ready Teddy, the world and Olympic three-day event champions, to second place in the Master Class section of the Pedigree Chum Belton Horse in Lincolnshire

Powell, who has had several lean years since his win on The Irishman — he broke his hip in a fall at Gatcombe and lost two of his advanced horses last year - had a foot-perfect cross-country round to finish one point ahead of Tait. round to finish in third place. Powell is now hoping his luck will hold for Badminion.

Flintstone had a superb season as an eight-year-old, when he finished fifth at Saumur. but did not compete again until this spring. After receiving his £1,000 prizemoney, Powell was reluctant to give the reasons why, but said: "Let's just say he's taken two years to mature."

Tait's luck with Ready Teddy has also changed. After a few mishaps the II-year-old gelding put in a solid performance in each of the three phases. "It'll have done him a world of good." Tait said. "It was a big, stiff course and just what he needed." For good measure Tait also won section K on Sam Barr's Welton Envoy and was third in section L on Chesterfield. The Keyhole fence near the end of the course proved too stiff for some of the Badminton contenders, including Peta Becken and Watermark.

Bettina Overesch-Boker, of Germany, on Watermill Stream, were comfortable winners of section M, three points ahead of Pippa Funnell on Rainbow Magic. Mark Todd was pleased with his Badminton contenders - Word For Word and Broadcast News. "I'm feeling very positive about Badminton." he said.

London Marathon: Moroccan outsider outwits world's finest to claim impressive victory

El Mouaziz, signed up only as a reserve, was allowed the time for an elaborate celebration by a strong field of runners that paid the price for worrying too much about each other

El Mouaziz proves too clever

By David Powell, athletics correspondent

THE Flora London Marathon can had to settle for finishing spent a record $1.5 million (about £950,000) investing in the finest field assembled for a men's competition, but the collective racing brain of the world's most accomplished distance runners was outwitted yesterday by an athlete signed up as a reserve. Abdelkader El Mouaziz, from Morocco, completed the first African double in the 19-year history of the event after Joyce Chepchumha, from kenya, had won the women's race.

El Mouaziz was a 16-1 outsider in a field that included Ronaldo da Costa, the world record-holder from Brazil, Josiah Thugwane, the Olympic champion from South Africa. and Abel Anton, the world champion from Spain. Though he had finished second last year, he was not invited this time until the drop-outs began. The field was that strong, London - or so it thought - could be run with-

When El Mouaziz followed similar tactics to those that he employed last April, building up a lead from the main group, few intagined he would still be in from come the finish line. In the 1998 race, Anton came past him 300 metres from the finish and the Morocas runner-up. By halfway the pacemakers. Thugwane and El Mouaziz were some 90 seconds ahead of the main group.

By 15 miles, with the last of the pacemakers now departed, El Mouaziz was out on his own. Richard Nerurkar, Britain's fastest marathon runner of recent times, commentating for BBC Television, was among those fooled. "I think that El Mouaziz is committing suicide," Nerurkar said at lo miles, with the Moroccan more than two minutes clear.

El Mouaziz passed 20 miles within a minute of worldrecord schedule and, by the 21st mile, with the leader still way out ahead, Nerurkar had changed his tune. "I do oot think they are going to catch him," Nerurkar said. This dme he was right

Soon the luminaries following began to realise lt, too. At 23 miles. El Mouaziz still led by more than two minutes. Antonio Pinto, twice the London Marathon champion, was the only one to retrieve an apparently lost cause. He set off in pursuit but still finished more than a minute behind.

Had El Mouaziz concentrated on pushing it to the line he would have taken the $25,000 for a course record, but, just as would work their way back, to worry about those out ahead. The runners are to blame, Pirto said. "All the top athletes were there looking at each other. Some runners took a risk and most of us did not." Anton added: "He took the risk and congratulations to him. We did not realise the winner was going to be so strong."

ted they had been too busy Neither attempted to blame either the pacemakers or the watching the top names in the field, assuming that they lack of information from race officials telling them how far El Mouaziz was ahead. Anton suggested that he did not realise El Mouaziz was among the athletes who had gone off with the pacemakers. I looked around and saw all the other 10p athletes and thought nobody in front was one of the favourites, so we took it easy," he said.

Today: pages 42-44

El Mouaziz, explaining his decision to break away earlier than last year, said: "I am not as strong in the finish as Anton or Pinto. They are good track runners, over 5,000 and 10,000 metres, and I am not. If I am with them at the finish I am going to lose."

Brown was cautious over whether his run yesterday should prompt him to concentrate on the marathon for the Olympic Games next year. The British record-holder for 10,000 metres, he may stick with that distance. He said: "It more optimistic about." Da Costa proved small value for his $250,000 appearance fee. He finished seventeenth, behind Tekeve Gebrselassie, the brother of Haile, the multi-world record-holder, who was thirteenth. Eamonn Martin, the 1993

For others, such as Moham-ed Farah, of Feltham School in Hounslow, it was another victory in a glowing series of teenage successes. Six weeks ago, he was the outstanding winner in the mud, sleet and gales of the English schools cross country championships over the hills above Luton.

Yesterday, in the more be-nign, although chilly condi-tions, of a windless morning on the flat roads of the capital, the 16-year-old demonstrated the same dominance, speeding home to finish first in the 15-17 category for London boys. He recorded a time of exactly 14min, 18sec clear of Richard Ward, of Sutton.

"I was shivering a bit at the start, but this was a sprint for me," Farah said. It was his third successive victory in the are never going to win". Reynolds was tense at the start, despite having won the race last year. "I found it difficult to relax, but I feit full of running when I went into Parliament Square and took over the lead. Then I heard my mum shouting at the start of The Mail - I always hear her cheering in my races - and that gave me another lift to produce a sprint finish.

Among the girls, Jo Ankier, of Henrietta Barnett School, was hugely impressive in finishing first in the London girls 15-17 category, 18sec clear of Jill Chrisoe, of Hillingdon, in ISmin 41sec.

In the wheelchair races, Dwayne Cooke, 16, of St Rose's School in Stroud. Gloucestershire, was first in the 14-17 class. "I like the adrenalin of athletics," Cooke

Dale's white suit, matching shoes and tangerine shirt, which he wore during the first session on Saturday, probably represented the most uncon entional outfit ever seen at the Crucible, but his total of 167 points in winning the fifteenth frame stands unquestionably as the highest aggregate in a single frame of any professional tournament, let alone he world championship.

Trailing 8-1 after the opening session. Dale, much more soberly dressed in black suit and royal blue shirt, fought back to only 9-S adrift. He potted the initial red in the fifteenth frame and placed an increasingly-nervous Bond in a snooker behind the yellow.

Although escape was straightfor ward, doing so without leaving Dale a scoring opportunity was not. Bond made 11 abortive attempts to caress the cue ball into the pack, each time being called for a "miss" before he finally achieved contact.

With 44 penalty points already to his credit, Dale forced a break-building chance from the ensuing safety exchange, which he exploited with a clearance of 122. One frame later. though, a relieved Bond was safely through.

"I must admit that thoughts of being given a taste of my own medicine did cross my mind on more than one occasion. I was made to sweat," Bond, who transformed a seemingly hopeless 9-2 deficit into a 10-9 victory over Cliff Thorburn at the corresponding stage in 1994, said. Bond, beaten by Stephen Hendry in the 1995 final, now looks set to play Ken Doherty, the champion two years ago, in the last lo. Doherty sat out a clearance of 137 from Steve James, but still led 8-1 overnight.

Anthony Hamilton, O'Brien's victim in the final of the British Open. became the first member of the world's top to perish when he was edged out 10-9 on the black by Chris Small, whose methodical style is unattractive but effective.

Hamilton compiled a pair of century breaks in the early stages but missed a series of crucial pots in oght corners, most notably the blue, while employing the rest in the deciding frame, which would have left Small requiring a snooker.

Even though the marathon encounter dragged on for seven hours, 57 minutes. Jimmy White was an interested spectator. Had Hamilton prevailed. White's hopes of regaining his status among the elite top 16 next season would have improved.

UNITED EVERTON

by George Caulkin

GIVEN that Everton have conducted their season with all the grace of a demented orchestra, it can hardly be surprising that alarm bells continue to echo in their ears even when the baton is grasped by another. So it was that when Walter Smith tiptoed into the media room at St James' Park, his quiet words of satisfaction were silenced by a blaring fire siren.

The cause of this emergency was not immediately apparent. although the suggestion was that Newcastle United had felt their fingers burnt, but the interruption failed to provoke histrionics. Throughout Everton's calamitous campaign. Smith has maintained a rare and impressive dignity; victory, even one as significant as this, was not to prompt any noticeable change.

The reticence of the manager was not matched by his team's supporters who buoyed by the lack of progress made by those sides below them, celebrated with predicta-ble gusto. Beating Charlton Athleoc at Goodison Park next weekend — "Newcastle have got their Cup Final, but that's ours," Kevin Camobell said - would lift them to 40 points and probable safety.

The vibrancy of this performance serves only to make their harrowing travails all the more peculiar, although the arrival of Campbell. 29. on loan from Trabzonspor has added a muscular dynamism to their forward line.

A delicious through-ball was delivered by Don Hutchison after barely 40 seconds, allowing Campbell to outsprint David Beharall. who was making his debut. and direct a firm shot beyood Shay Given. A more substantial reward came on the stroke of half-time, when, after good work by Francis Jeffers. Given failed to clutch Campbell's innocuous flick. Four goals in two games is not to be scoffed at.

IT IS clear that English foot-ball is again ready to help Paul Merson deal with his personal torment. The Aston Villa and England player yester-day admitted that he had relapsed in his battle against alcoholism, and the news drew a sympathetic response (Stephen Wood writes).

David Davies, the FA executive director, said: 'I was very saddened to hear this news. Everyone in football has admired the way Paul has fought this problem and we will be talking to his club, and to Paul himself, to see what we can do to help a very popuhim in the past and it is our intendon to do so again now."

Footballers' Association, said: It is sad and disappointing to hear this. We will provide all the support we can, but die onus is on Paul to make the first move."
Steve Stride, the Villa secretary-director, also made it clear that they would not desert Merson. "Whatever problems Paul may have, we will support him 100 per cent," he said.

Merson, 31, who maintains that the best treatment comes from playing, said: "I have relapsed big-time and I can feel lar player. We have helped it all slipping away again. The truth is that it is as hard today as it was four years ago.'

MARK ANTONY stands before the throng and begins to speak. "Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears. I come to bury Caesar. not to praise him." And, after a rousing monologue, he does. It is a wonderful scene, but it needs to be done properly. If Antony gets hiccups or the body starts snoring, the magic is gone, people start to laugh.

And, sad to say, they did just that at the City Ground on Saturday. As the burial scene was acted out in front of them. there were giggles, even the odd guffaw, as Caesar, played by an otherwise exemplary Nottingham Forest, somehow avoided sinking six feet under into the Nadonwide League. Strachan offers limp explanation

MAGNUS HEDMAN is an agreeable young man. He is a keen angler, played ice hockey well enough to be offered professional terms and enjoys the cappuccino culture of the cafés around Northampton, where he lives. He chats freely, intelligently and without a hint of suspicion. He is a good goalkeeper, too. He has yet to play in a losing team since he broke into the Sweden side two years ago and has kept 11 clean sheets in 14 appearances. All of which does not quite square with Hedman's brusque, atbeit apotogetic, brush-off when questioned about his health after Coventry's defeat by Middlesbrough at Highfield Road on Saturday. "I've got nothing to say." he said as he hobbled away. "I'm sorry, I can't talk." It is unlikely that his silence was self-determined.

Hedman was injured in the third minute after colliding with Gary Pallister, the Middiestirough defender, as they jumped for the ball from Townsend's cross. Pallister retired 14 minutes later, having sustained a thigh injury, but Hedman continued, clearly in pain from his damaged hip and unable to take goal kicks or make clearances.

He resembled an arthritic old man, barely able to move, and was no more than a startled bystander when Kinder's half-hit shot slid past him in the 65th minute. In the first half. Hedman appeared to signal to Gordon Strachan, the Coventry manager, that he could not carry on: in the second, the home fans made the same observadon, rather more graphically, to Strachan. "What does the crowd know?" Strachan said. "I asked Magnus at half-time whether he could play on and he said he could. I sent someone around to ask him again by Russell Kempson during the second half and he said the same. I don't think the injury affected him for Kinder's goal. He said he was wrong-footed, that's all." Strachan's explanation was and could have used Chris Kirkland, 17, the subsotute goalkeeper. Better to have an able-bodied novice, surely, than someone incapacitated. unconvincing. He must have recognised Hedman's distress

Middlesbrough always appeared capable of stretching their unbeaten run to seven and confirmed as much eight minutes from the end. Maddison's corner was only halfcleared and Gordon volleyed it back through a mass of bodies. Again Hedman stood stricken, yet perhaps even Kirkland would not have reached it. Of the first goal, though, the debate rages on.

FA Carling Premiership: Veteran striker sustains pursuit of treble

Sheringham clips the ball back across goal for Solskjaer to give Manchester United the lead. Solskjaer returned the compliment for the second goal. Photograph: Dan Chung

OVER the past year. Teddy Sheringham's career has been as vulnerable to break-ins as an unattended flat on a dank housing estate. First of all, the robbers took his England shirt. The Manchester United jersey was soon to follow. Most ageing sportsmen have to put up with ransacked lives and every other sign of fame seemed set to vanish, but Sheringham's case was different.

The valuables are being returned. Managers function at a low level of compassion and it is the needs of United that have seen Alex Ferguson act in the forward's interests. Introduced as a substitute, he had the height to loom over the Juventus defence and assist at the equaliser in the first leg of the European Cup semi-final. Now, his other attributes are also restored to working order. On Saturday, Sheffield Wednesday were, in every sense, a flat team. The rigid lines of their defence and midfield left Sheringham, 33, tr apply his knowledge of all the hiding places on the pitch. Although he scored a goal of his own and created the others, the veteran was as notable for his playmaking from withdrawn positions, as he pampered other attackers with back-heels. flicks and of Zinedine Zidane, even if it will be far harder to maintain the resemblance when Zidane himself and the rest of Juventus side are on the field. All the same, Sheringham may well have earned a place in the line-up for Turin. At the very least, he has deepened the resources he has deepened the resources available to the inscrutable Ferguson, ensuring that Juventus will be in real doubt over United's selection.

If Sheringham has an important role to play, it may be at the continuing expense of Dwight Yorke, despite the latter's strong claim to the Footballer of the Year award. In the longer term. there cou difficulty in paying for that sort of wealth of possibilities. With the BSkyB bid for United blocked by the Government, Martin Edwards, the United chairman, has suggested that transfer activity this summer will be limited to the signing of a replacement for Peter Schmeichel, the goalkeeper.

paid manager in the FA Carling Premiership, but personal enrichment alone may not mollify him. Noting that the two European Cup will entail a dozen matches before the knockout phase is reached. Ferguson observed that extended squads will be vital. It might have to be the emerging youngsters, such as Wes Brown, who are asked to swell the numbers at Old Trafford. Failure is never far away, instead of paying attention to the opposition, they only paid tribute to them. After four severe hours of football against Arsenal last week, a United team that retained eight of the outfield players who had begun the FA Cup semi-final replay was surpris-ingly brisk and clever in its attacks. The docility of Wednesday might have been the reaction of disappointed men who had been boping for jaded adversaries.

After 36 minutes, Roy Keane reached a long cross from Jesper Blomqvist and pulled the ball back to Sheringham, who jabbed it on towards Ole Gunnar Solskjaer. The Norwegian, darting in front of Emer-son Thome, finished firmly. A minute from the interval, United moved further ahead when a cross from Solskjaer was headed home by Sheringham. It was the 250th goal of his senior career, but his first since December 2.

He was at the heart, too, of the 62nd minute. Keane cut an acute pass into the path of Paul Scholes, who scored with a deflected shot after Sheringham's glancing return ball had completed a one-two with the midfield player. The team's obvious contentment makes them more dangerous than ever and they will be enhanced by the return of Schmeichel against Juventus.

The injured Ryan Giggs is still doubtful.

"We will need to have a wonderful performance in Turin and hit the heights." Ferguson said, "but the players are doing that quite regularly at the moment. We regularly at the moment. We need to score over there, but we will do that with more control and patience."

Wednesday, with six defeats in seven matches, are giving transfusions of confidence to virtually everyone they encounter. They are not even capable of basic abrasiveness and i was always apparent that Perguson would be spared any concern over fresh injuries The movement of United in midfield and attack bewildered Wednesday, ensuring that they were frequently in no position even to attempt a

The Manchester United manager would be better ad-vised to concentrate on the football and he has more than enough to occupy his thoughts. Saturday in Rome brought confirmation that Juventus are coming to the boil with uncanny timing and they continue to scald anyone who dares to dip in their toes.

They played away to Lazio, the leaders of Serie A. beat them 3-1 and headed back to Turin in the sort of indomitable mood that suggests defeat on Wednesday is unthinkable. ft did not matter that Lazio were in reckless form, from the goalkeeper, who literally threw in the first goal, to Christian Vieri, who looked £18 miltion-worth of running and 18 pence-worth of finishing. They still needed killing off and Juventus were not hesitant when it came to plunging the knife.

Juventus will have to run a million miles to beat us," Ferguson said recently, to which the Italians would reply: "If that is what it takes." There is a durability to them and it was impossible to leave the Olympic Stadium without a feeling of dread for United's prospects.

Ferguson's team can win in Turin, they can reach the European Cup final, but they will have to play the football of their dreams to do it. Form suggests that they will have the glimmer of an op-portunity but miss the mo-

The only dilemma for Carlo Ancelotti is whether to play two strikers, as he did on Saturday, or whether to bamboozle United again by playing Zidane behind a lone striker in Inzaghi. The Juventus coach's comments on Saturday suggested that he may twist his Old Trafford formation rather than stick. "We will attack from the start," he said. "There is oo point us waiting for the kick-off it would have been good, but, after seeing what unfolded, it was not There were three glaring reasons why this was far from being the valuable point it seemed: Charlton were the better, more imaginative side, they were unlucky in the extreme, and Leeds United, for all their manager's protestations of tiredness, simply went through the motions, with the odd dash of arrogance, as if they had nothing to play for. Perhaps younger players exhibit weariness through petulance. They were frustrating to watch, for the understanding and technique was there, along with bags of confidence and the odd flamboyant backheel, but so much of it lacked desire.

David O'Leary, the Leeds manager, defended the youngsters who have brought Leeds so close to European Cup qualification using Harry Kewell, 20, as an example. "He's played 50 games this season. People say he's lost his sparkle. I don't think he's entitled to have that bit of sparkle, to be quite hon-

Cample The times monday april 19 1999 Rogers ensures tempo that Wigan get Wembley glory

WHEN Millwall last graced 90,000-strong crowd paid £26,000 to watch the 1945 League South final, Princess Elizabeth was an interested spectator. Whether she acclaimed Chelsea's 2-0 victory or commiserated with the Milwall hordes is not recorded.

What Queen Elizabeth, as she is now, might have made of the Auto Windscreens Shield final between Millwall and Wigan Athletic at Wembley yesterday will not be chronicled, either. An invitaoon was sent to Buckingham Palace by a cheeky chappie from the New Den. but Her Majesty politely declined. to was a wise decision.

Not until the closing stages did the afternoon spring to life, when the 47,000 Millwall supporters at last found a collective voice to outshout the 8,000 or so who had made the journey from Lancashire, But barely had they discovered their vocal chords than they were silenced by the winning goal in the third minute of injury rime. Liddell's handball went unnoticed in the build-up and. after Nethercott had headed weakly to the edge of the Millwall area, Rogers chested the ball down and dispatched a low shot past Roberts. The Wigan few erupted in delight and the multitude of stewards ringing the pitch rose as one in red alert in front of the Millwall masses. Their concern was unwarranted. It had been a strange occasion, preceded by dire warn-ings that Wembley would be laid waste by the visit of Mill-wall's notorious followers. The Twin Towers would become the Single Tower, it was predicted, as the demolition of the Venue of Legends - due to

The minute's silence to mark the tenth anniversary of Hillsborough may have been interrupted and cut short some Wigan observers were disrespectful, too — but the at-mosphere remained bubbly and upbeat. The Elephant and Castle had rocked to the strains of "No one likes us, we don't care" in the morning and shaven-headed, tattooed men, slugging from cans of cider, mingled playfully with children in lion's costumes.

Among the Wigan fans were members of the town's rugby league club, the Warriors, who have made Wembley a second home after ten appearances m the Challenge Cup final in the past 12 years. In lieu of their absence from it this time around, they joined their sporting cous-ins, with whom they will share a new £32 million stadium next season.

Dave Whelan, the wealthy owner of both Wigan clubs, was also making a nostalgic first trip to Wembley wearing his football hat, since he played for Blackburn Rovers against Wolverhampton Wanhunger for the oval ball, but the ball past Carroll, only for the game improved markedly after the interval. Penalty appeals came and went, in equal measure for each Naconwide League second division side. and Millwall almost went ahead when Harris prodded member of the Sutton United places to play and places to score, this is it. Wembley, de-crepit old stadium that it is, will never lose its appeal. As the Millwall fans set off to drown their sorrows on the Old Kent Road, Ray Mathias, the Wigan manager, turned his attention to more sober matters. Wigan lie in eighth place in the second division and retain an outside chance of reaching the play-offs and a possible return to North London next month. "I was delighted to see the goal go in," he said. "Millwall made it hard, but t thought we played a bit better in the second half."

Wigan, who won the compe tition in 1985, when it was known as the Freight Rover Trophy, must return their attentions to the League when they play Northampton Town tomorrow night. "At the moment, the champagne is on ice," Mathias said. "We've got to be good boys tonight and go to be good boys fornight and go straight home."

Bradford overture hits wrong notes

Bradford City Huddersfield Town.....3

By KEVIN EASON

THE pre-match anthem that had Bradford City supporters throwing their heads back to sing along with once popular pop diva, Yaz, clearly failed to move Huddersfield Town's players. As Bradford fans chorused "The Only Way is Up", Huddersfield kepl their heads down and planned the undoing of their Yorkshire neighbours at this crucial stage in their quest for pro-motion to the FA Carling Premier-

Perhaps Huddersfield are a team of music-lovers. Whatever the reason, they were galvanized into re-sisting the initial onslaught of Bradford, including a goal after just eight minutes, to score three against the odds and then hang on for 45 minutes with ten men after Steve Jenkins, their captain, was sent off. This game was ample evidence that the Premiership does not hold exclusive rights to football drama, with six bookings, the dismissal, five goals and a missed penalty ten minutes from time that could have helped Bradford to square this game and claim a vital point. Paul Jewell, the Bradford manager. will single out his central defenders for special instruction at the training ground this morning. The number of times that Wayne Allison and Marcus Stewart combined to embarrass Darren Moore and Ashley Westwood through the middle of Bradford's defence was too many to count.

The start held only false promise as Bradford surged forward on their wave of disco-inspired passion to be rewarded by a simply Route One goal: Gary Walsh, the goalkeeper, humped the ball for-ward, Mills headed on and Blake stabbed the ball home.

But as Bradford pressed forward, there was precious little cov-er for their central defenders, allowing Huddersfield to target Allison and Stewart. The result was three Huddersfield goals in 14 minutes and a Bradford team more con-fused than crestfallen. As the ten-sion rose, so the tackles became more rash, though the departure of Jenkins, for squaring up to Peter Beagrie, looked more posturing than threat. However, it changed the complexion of the game, with Hudderfield the second half in two ranks defending their penalty area and Bradford pinging in cross after cross. There was one goal to come in the 72nd minute, although it was no more than consolation for Bradford and Dean Windass, the scorer, who missed the penalty seven minutes later.

Jewell could barely believe it. The promotion chase is still on, but losing hurt, especially as the beating was adminstered by Bradford's

Birmingham City... Wolverhampton Wanderers By RICHARD HOBSON

IF SUNDERLAND acknowledge the need to strengthen a side that is by some distance the best in the Nationwide League to survive at a higher level, then what does that say for the prospects of those who join them in the FA Carling Premiership?

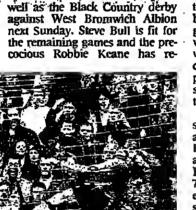

Birmingham City have featured in the top six of the first division for all except four weeks of the season. Wolverhampton Wariderers, with one defeat in 17 league games — away 10 Sunderland: have timed their progress to arrive at the play-offs in the best of form. Both bave smart, improved grounds, wealthy benefactors and loyal supporters who cling still to the misguided belief that they are following a "big" club. Yet you fear for either should promotion materialise next month.

They have to get there first. With Ipswich Town and Sunderland providing the last pair of oppo-nents, Birmingham might be grate-ful for a five-point cushion over Watford. "I think we have given great encouragement to the teams around us, but we are near the end and the others are still behind," Trevor Francis, the Birmingham manager, said,

Wolves, too, face a testing run-in against Bolton Wanderers, Grims-by Town and Bradford City, as well as the Black Country derby against West Bromwich Albion next Sunday. Steve Bull is fit for

In asking Steve Corica to operate behind Flo, he caught Birmingham by surprise and, although the home side created more chances, they never quite came to terms with the little man from Australia.

The goal, Corica's first since November 1996, was a beauty. Interchanging passes with Carl Robin-son in each half, he scythed through the Birmingham midfield before meeting a cleverly-dis-guised reverse ball from Emblen with a firm, low shot. Breaching a well-marshalled defence that had conceded just three goals in the seemed to be beyond Birmingham thereafter.

Richards and Curle presented a solid barrier white Stowell proved a competent figure as he passed Bert Williams's club record of 421 appearances for a goalkeeper. Bradbury shaved the bar in the 76th minute, the promising Hughes slotted wide and, when Johnson's header beat Stowell, Gilkes was on the line to turn it away. Was Off the Time to turn it away.

Bolton Wanderers..... Ipswich Town.....0

By MARTIN WOODS

PLAYING your way out of the Nationwide League first division requires not only touch, finesse and luck, but your players need also a certain muscularity to do justice to their will to win. It is the kind of robustness that Ronaldo possesses and it helps your cause considerably if your centre forward has enjoyed the benefit of a few masterclasses from the Brazilian prodigy.

Eidur Gudjohnsen can play foot-ball, at times, like Ronaldo. Bolton's Icelandic No 9 played with the Brazil striker at PSV Eindhoven before an ankle broken playing for his national under-21 team kept him oul for two seasons and led indirectly to his arrival at the Reebok

"The boy has got talent for a 20-year-old," Colin Todd, the Bolton's manager, said and, for most of this match, he embarrassed Ipswich. He created the first goal in the 37th minute with a 60-yard run after Thetis, the Ipswich full back, was dispossessed by Frandsen, who passed to Gudjohnsen. The blond striker raced away into the heart of the Ipswich defence before forcing Richard Wright, the goalkeeper, to parry his fierce shot only as far as Bob Taylor, whose shot from a seemingly impossible angle went in off Wright.

Gudjohansen is no Ronaldo and it was not quite in the Ryan Giggs class, but the sheer audacity of his brilliant solo run marks him out as a fine prospect.

His goal, halfway through the second half, was inevitable, given his burgeoning confidence and Ips-wich's flawed response to their first-half deficit. The decision of George Burley, their manager, to play three at the back and throw caution to the wind in pursuit of three points was ex-posed as naïve and could yet cost his side a place in the FA Carling Premiership. On this form, they would not wish to meet Bolton in the play-offs. Gudjohansen struck in the 68th minute after another Ipswich attack broke down on the left. Jensen broke away and found Frandsen in support. The Denmark Under-21 player had time to find Gardner on the left, who looked up to see Gudjohnsen starting his run into the ed the delicious strike that Gud-johnsen provided to beat Wright. lpswich did hit the woodwork once in each half, but Johnson and Scowcroft were made to look ordinary by Bergsson and Fish in the centre of defence.

"We did have a bit of an indifferent spell, but it's how you come out of it and I'm just hoping now that we've turned the corner," Todd Crewe Alexandra.....0 Watford.....

IT IS obvious that old habits die hard for Graham Taylor. the Watford manager, as his team continue to stalk the play-off contenders in the Nationwide League first division. His doctrine that the best form of defence is attack inspired a previous Vicarage Road dynasty to football's highest level nearly 20 years ago, although there were murmours of discontent among purists regarding their robust and direct mute to the 10p. City blossom in the garden things appear to be working

By BILL EDGAR

TO MANCHESTER City's supporters, the footballing backwater of Rent was once merely the last part of their journey to European matches. Now, not only have passport control at Dover and Folkestone become distant memories, but the fans have the indignity of realising that the county has become a destination in itself. City struggled initially this season to come to terms with clubs such as Gillingham, but it seems that they are now well over their culture shock. Having lost only one of their previous 20 games, the visitors made their first league visit to the Garden of England on Sat-Manchesler City......2 urday and came up smelling of roses.

Gillingham had been unbeaten at Priestfield Stadium since early Seplember and performed well enough to give City cause for concern should the two teams meet again in the second division play-offs. "We've played better and not won," Joe Royle, the City manager, said.

It was Royle's switch from a 4-4-2 formation to 3-5-2 after 15 minutes that turned the game. Terry Cooke, a winger, adapıed well at wing back and opened the scoring in the 31st minute when his 25-yard volley took a deflection. Cooke joined City permanently on Friday after a £1 million transfer from Manchester United.

Horlock added to Cooke's goal in the 64th minute with a free kick and although Robert Taylor and Mark Saunders brought fine saves from Nicky Weaver, the visiting goalkeeper, Gillingham were unable to reduce the arrears. The home side's lack of depth is underlined by the fact that both their reserves and youth team are bottom of their respective leagues. If City and not Gillingham, gain promooon, it may be some time before their supporters oeed to locate Kent again.

GARN SMART, 35, came off the bench to score the winning goal and complete a fine comeback that saw Forest Green Rovers beat St Albais City 3-2 at The Lawn yesteday to clinch a place in the HA Umbro Trophy final against Kingstonian at Wembley in May 15 (Walter Gammie vrites).

After the 1-1 draw in the first leg. St Albans took a 3-1 aggregate lead thanks to an own goal by Mike Kilgour strike by the prolific Stevel Clark. Alex Sykes reduced the arrears for Forest Greek just before half-time, and tan Hedges (74min) and Smart (81min) won the match in the second half.

The sharp skills of Geoff Pitcher had set up Kingstonian's 3-1 win at Cheltenham Town on Saturday. A free kick and two crosses by Pitcher supplied the goals for Matt Crossley, David Leworthy and Gary Patterson that ensured a return to Wembley for Geoff Chapple, the Kingstonian manager.

Patterson's strike snuffed out the glimmer of hope offered Cheltenham when Neil Grayson made it 2-1 in the 78th minute.

AS INSIDER knowledge goes. it was hard to beat. Former Swansea City personnel can be found at Cardiff City in the form of the manager, his assistant, one of the physios and four players, three of whom were in action yesterday. Yel. try as they might, they were unable to work out how to breach their local rivals' defence and gain reward for their clear superiority.

Cardiff went close a dozen times to finding the goal that would have taken them to the top of the Nationwide League third division, eight of those in the final 20 minutes. In contrast, Swansea were restricted to a few long-range efforts on goal and failed to force Seamus Kelly, the Cardiff goalkeeper, into a save.

Today there was only one team in it," Frank Burrows, the Cardiff manager, said, but because of poor technique and poor finishing, we didn't convert any of our chances." It was Cardiff's eighth draw in 13 games, but, six points clear of the play-off zone, they are still strong favourites to go up. Burrows, one of five men to manage both of these bitter rivals, knows only too well the reason for the noon start to this match. Unlike in some recent seasons, away supporters were allowed to anend the fixture and trouble was averted scoring opportunities arriving near the eod of this game through the use of police dogs. Swansea managed two decent shots by Matt Bound near half-rime that flew just over the bar, but the defender spent much of the second half keeping the home side at bay. In injury time, Bound cleared off the line from Danny Hill and the draw keeps Swansea on course for the play-offs, through which they were promoted from this level in 1988. One of the teams to go up automatically that year was Cardiff, managed, in his first spell there, by Burrows. CARDIFF CITY (3-5-2) S Keby — J Echhardt, G Michell, M Ford — W O Sullwan (sub. Running repairs leave Leicester on track for title

By David Hands RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

LONDON'S marathon may have been completed yesterday, but Leicester, having hit the wall at Bath, are still drag-ging their tired bodies to within touching distance of the Allied Dunbar Premiership title. Tuigamala attempts to get the ball away as he is brought to ground in the defeat by Wasps yesterday

By DAVID HANDS

THIS season still has the capacity to surprise and after the dust had settled at Loftus Road yesterday oo a riveting match, Wasps had moved into the top five of the Allied Dunbar Premiership. In contrast. Newcastle were looking at the ruin of their European hopes and the loss of Rob Andrew.

trying in vain to stop the forward rumble that gave Wasps their third try and a matchwinning conversion for Alex King. The former England fly
holf will have an X-ray on his half will have an X-ray on his shoulder today and is virtually certain to miss the Tetley's Bitter Cup final against Wasps on May 15.

The taste in Newcastle mouths was even more bitter for the belief that refereeing errors led directly to two of the Wasps tries. The first, by Martyn Wood, came after the match officials had apparent ly missed the deflection of a clearing kick off a Wasps hand before Newcastle players were given offside.

Nature of defeat gives Newcastle bitter aftertaste

The second was for a charge by Va'aiga Tuigamala on Gareth Rees that was ruled

From both penalties. Wasps were able to create the pressure from which their tries developed. The decisive one, by Darren Molloy, came after Newcastle had been penalised twice and Gary Armstrong, their captain, had been sinbinned for killing the ball. Sensibly throwing a long pass to Lawrence Dallaglio, Wasps surged infield and near enough to the posts to make the conversion a formality. Defeat keeps Newcastie in eighth place and severely reduces their prospect of a money-spinning run in the Wood dotted down the try after his forwards had provid-ed the platform and when King added a penalty and a dropped goal, the London side were back in front. Only for six minutes. Jim

ONE down and one to go, Richmond cleared the first hurdle of their North East double successfully — but only just Earl Va'a, the fly half, secured the points, with his fifth penalty goal, from in front of the West Harrlepool posts, with less than four minutes left to

Minutes earlier, Steven Vile had put West ahead for the first and only time in the match. His penalty kick in the 74th minute brought him a match total of 30 points. Richmond responded instantly and when Stewart Piercy, the referee, awarded them a contentious penalty, Va'a put the kick

Richmond scored the only try in the first half, when Va'a played Jason Wright, the centre, into space and he galloped clear. Otherwise, the scoring was left to the two place-kick ers. Va'a landing four penalties from five attempts for Rich mond, with Vile successful with three for West.

After the break, West looked more determined and took full advantage of Richmond being down to 14 men - after Dan McFarland had been sinbinned - when Mike Mullins was driven over for a convened try to pull the match level. Richmond scored two welltaken tries through Lee Best the full back, and Barry Wil liams, the hooker, to lead 33-25 🗲 at the end of the third quarter. Then Vile made his mark on the contest with a try and the subsequent conversion, and when he landed his seventh penalty six minutes from time. West looked on the verge of a

JOHN GALLAGHER, the Harlequins director of rugby, has set his club the task of winning five of their last six league games to ensure European Cup competition at The Stoop Memorial Ground next season. However, the former All Black has also given his players a stark message: if they keep performing like they did against Bedford, then they will have as much chance of reaching Europe as a cross Channel swimmer setting out from Dover and turning sharp

Talking of swimming, Gallagher plans a session in a lo-cal pool as part of his team's preparation for the visit to West Hartlepool on Wednesday. "I might just drown a few while we are there," he said.

"This was our worst performance of the season. In the first half, we were tactically inept. It was very difficult for me to watch and it must have been for our supporters too. No one is smiling in our dressing-room and we all have a lot of hard work to do if we want to get into Europe. I think we can afford only one defeat from here on in.

"I said to Rudi Straculi [the Bedford coach) that we didn't deserve to win - although that was no consolation, of course, to him."

Straeuli blamed poor decision-making in the final ten minutes for the latest in a long line of Bedford near-misses. With five minutes remaining, and with Harlequins strug-gling to hold a 17-16 lead. Bed-ford chose to instruct Tony Yapp, the fly half, to go for goal when a penalty was awarded wide on the right. Yapp had landed the conversion of Rory Underwood's 45th-minute try from a similar position, but a squally shower had blown in from behind the Harlequins posts.

In injury time, two mistakes from the otherwise impressive Dan Harris gifted late tries to Daren O'Leary and Jamie Williams for Harlequins. Indeed, Harlequins fashioned just one coherent movement in the whole game. The introduction of Keith Wood and Zinzan Brooke brought some order and a series of destructive scrums led to a try for Dan Luger, the subject of rumours of a move to Saracens.

Northampton. London Scottish.

By Alan Pearey

IT LOOKS too late to stop Leicester winning the Allied Dunbar Premiership, but second-placed Northampton are already dreaming of a greater prize. "We'll be a force against anyone in Europe if we play like that," Ian McGeechan, the club's director of rugby, said. 'The 15 minutes after halftime were special. Northampton were seen as a pretty side - now we're becoming a ruthless side. We've put the club where it's never been." McGeechan will not concede the title to Leicester but may feel that their poor new year form on a glue-pot of a sur-face -- "what has improved New Zealand rugby most is quality of pitches," he said — will cost Northampton their first significant trophy. His spirits have been lifted by some devastating lateseason form, with the defeat of London Scottish at Franklin's Gardens on Saturday taking Northampton's try haul to 17 in three games.

Nick Beal had already had a try disallowed when he swooped for the opening score after 23 minutes and a three-try, ten-minute burst after half-time took the game way beyond the Exiles' reach.

Pat Lam, also denied a score by the referee's whistle and felled brilliantly by Simon Fenn with the line beckoning, gained his reward at the third time of asking a minute from the end. It was Lam's twelfth league try of the season, putting him equal first with Steve Hanley, the injured Sale injured wing.

RESULTS AND TABLES, Page 40

The presence of men like Lam, Tim Rodber and Federico Méndez gives the Northampton pack a menacing look not matched by a less experienced threequarter line. Accordingly, they are seeking a world-class centre and wing for next season.

Scottish are not yet safe from relegation and the spectre looms of a play-off with Bristol, who have a holding in Scottish's professional club. Extraordinarily, they would approach such a meeting knowing that, while defeat would mean relegation, victory might mean that the West Country club would take them over and leave

TWO Ireland internationls, one former, the other present, stood on the sidelines at Sunbury, watching the quality of this performance no doubt with similar emotions. Malcolm O'Kelly, who will not play again for the club because of injury and his decision to return to Ireland this summer, questioned whether he had done the right thing. Simon Geoghegan, who is still registered with Bath but is a former Exiles favourite, confirmed that he will not play senior rugby again. O'Kelly hinted that his decision to rejoin St Mary's on an Irish Rugby Foothall Union contract had been prompted by the lack of a firm offer from London Irish. Dick Best, the club's director of rugby described O'Kelly's departure as a huge loss. It was London Irish's first league victory over Bath in ten attempts and did their hopes of qualifying for Europe a power of good. They are now third with 28 points, but have only two remaining games.

In the meantime, Best will continue his trawl for recruits, concentrating where possible on British or, preferably. Irish talent. Conor O'Shea, who's try in the second minute opened the points in all. may have been the only Irishman in the side, but the support showed that the club will always be a social focus for the Irish community in the capital.

Having seen Bath shred Saracens, London Irish, who were quicker to the breakdown, concentrated on aggress sive defence in the build-up to the game and it worked. They were in Bath's face from the kick-off and knocked them out of their stride, prompting a rash of mistakes and turnovers from which the home side prospered. Brendan Venter was the catalyst, either popping up at fly half or in his usual position at centre, but the support cast must not be overlooked. Robert Todd, doing a passable imitation of Valaiga Tuigamala. helped himself to three tries while Burrows. Berridge and Hardwick also crossed as Bath failed to live with the

by surprise, he ran out of support, but the movement did establish the pattern. Four tries came in quick succession in the next ten minutes, three of them to Matthew Robinson.

The first came from nothing so creative as the run by Thomas. An error by Rees in loose play saw Robinson latch on to the stray ball to run in for the score. The next one was beautifully initiated by a threequarter movement in their own half and a timely underhanded pass by Taylor to David Weatherley behind the back of his opposite number. Robinson outstripped the cover defence over 60 metres.

Swansea were now in rampant mood, with Thomas only offering a rare kick for relief Both the try scored by Richard Rees and the third of Robinson's tries were initiated deep within their own half and were examples, at this stage, of Swansea's attacking mood.

Cross Keys offered some enterprise of their own, but the difference in speed, power and organisation of their opponents was noticeable. The closest that Cross Keys came was in the second half, when Bebb and Bushell contrived a brilliant move out of defence but were denied a try by Robinson's last-ditch tackle.

Swansea confirmed their superiority with further scores in the second period, but they failed to achieve the same fluid ity and their tries lacked the panache of the early stages.

HOCKEY

Southgate frustrated by Mason's defiance

THE English Hockey League Premiership play-olls ended at Reading yesterday with the home side defeating Southgate 4-2 to join Cannock, the holders, in the final at Milton Keynes on May 3. Cannock had qualified on Saturday with a hard-earned 1-0 victory over

Southgate. Reading, who had beaten Canterbury 8-2 on Saturday, encountered stiffer opposition from Southgate, who levelled the scores in the eigthteenth minute with a well taken goal by Woods after Robinson had given Reading the lead from a short corner eight minutes

Although claimed the initiative at the start of the second half they fell behind in the 45th minute when Hoskin put Reading 2-1 Three spectacular saves by Mason denied Southgate a goal from short corners before Reading went into a 4-1 lead with goals by Loose and Robinson. Two minutes before the end, Williams converted a short corner for Southeate.

The Cannock v Southgate match on Saturday should have produced more than one goal, but on the balance of olay Cannock deserved to win. When Sharpe scored in the 62nd minute from a scrambled short corner he atoned for an earlier miss by Crutchley, who failed to beat McKewan, the substitute Southgate

Culliford shoots Clifton to final

Slongh qualified for the final on May 3 thanks to two successfol penalty corners by Ali Burd, which enabled them to beat Ipswich 2-1 and qualify automatically for the inaogural final in the new play-off system. Ipswich made the perfect start against Clifton, who had beaten Hightown 2-I on Sat-

orday, when Vicki Sandall glanced in a free hit by Sandie Lister in the third minute. Sarah Bamfield put them io the driving seat with a superbly-struck second goal just before the interval.

However, Cliftoo hit back quickly after the restart when Tammy Miller set up Juliet Rayden to reduce the deficit. Culliford proceeded to level the scores seven minutes later when she stole in to nudge home Denise Marston-Smith's shot, following up after a corner.

As Ipswich fell apart, Culliford was on target again to put her team ahead in the 59th minute and Marston-Smith made sure of victory cight minutes from time.

TO Michael Kasprowicz, the Leicestershire and Australia seam bowler, the business of giving teams nicknames and playing music as players walk out to bat is old hat. Kasprowicz, who had the dubious pleasure of playing in the opening fixture of the new 45-over, two-division CGU National League at a sodden

Grace Road on Saturday, seems bemused that people are in such a lather about the jazzing up of English cricket. Kasprowicz bas been a Queensland Bull for about four years and, as far as he is concerned, that is just the way modera cricket is, like it or lump it. ing to visit Spain at any time and it would be a pleasure to be in Barcelona this week. This has nothing to do with a desire to visit Gaudi's cathedral or to take a leisurely stroll down the Rambias Besides, t prefer the cathedral in Majorca. The attraction of Spain's second city this week concerns celebratory events to do with José Maria Olazábal and Sergio García.

Though Severiano Balles-tens has said that he is recognised and appreciated more in the United Kingdom than in his native country, it is hard to imagine Catalonia being anything other than en fête this week when Olazabal returns to competitive play in the Spanish Open after his triumph in the Masters, and when Garcia, who had been the leading amateur in Augusta, turns professional on Wednesday.

For Spain to have the winner and the leading amateur in the Masters in the same year is a remarkable double. The day when this happened was arguably the greatest day in Spain's golfing history. exceeding Ballesteros's first triumph in the Open Championship and the Masters, in 1979 and 1980 respectively, greater than Olazábal's first victory in the Masters, in 1994, and greater even than Europe winning the first Ryder Cup to be staged in Spain. a team captained by Ballesteros, in 1997.

Never mind Olazabal's iron play, his wonderful chipping and putting. I have enormous admiration for his character and dignity and the week before the Masters it was instructive to see him around the hotel where he, Sergio Gomez, his manager, and Maide, Gomez's wife, were staying. At breakfast-time one morning. Olazabal playfully pretended to strangle Maitie; at other omes, the three of them did a mock conga together as they came back to the hotel after dinner. They looked like two doting parents with their eldest son.

stop me wondering then, as t had at other times since he had returned from his absence with foot problems. later diagnosed as a lower back injury, whether he had made some Faustian deat with the Almighty - give me my health back and in return t will accept a diminunon of Such thoughts have been swept away by the manner in which he played at Augusta. Discovering that regaining his health is a greater gift than regaining his gotf has helped him to play better. He remains the worst driver among the world's leading professionals, but he is tess hard on himself now. Gone are some of the furies that used to beset him when a three-iron from 220 yards would end a few feet from its intended target, or an 18-foot curling putt would not disappear into the hole.

His calmness and resolunon on his way to his second green jacket could hardly have been improved upon. Now, indeed, he might become only the second gotfer in the game's history to win more major championships after a serious illness than before. Ben Hogan had three major championships to his credit when he was nearly killed in a car accident in February 1949. Despite being told he might never walk again, he recovered and won six more. Garcia turning professionat this week will strike a chord in the memory because the hoop-la surrounding this event with be reminiscent of that which surrounded Justin Rose, a young Englishman who quit the amateur ranks immediately after finishing joint-fourth in the Open last July. There the similarities end, though, > arcla's career has monitored controlled more closely than the economy. Talk about being booted and spurred for professionalism: in the past six years, he has competed in nearly 30 professional tournaments. 13 of them in 1998. when he missed only one halfway cut. He has won 37 and lost only two matchplay matches since 1997. In short, he has answered every challenge that has been put to him, the most recent being to overtake Tom McKnight, the losing finalist in the 1998 US Amaleur Championship, who led him by two strokes after 54 holes at Augusta, and so become the leading amaleur. This was the final flourish of a ship deals and contracts were put in place last week. "We learnt our lesson from Justin," José Marquina, who describes himself as García's unofficial manager, said. "We want Sergio to be able to concentrate on playing golf as a professional from the moment he turns pro." Clearly, that has happened and Garcia starts a new phase of his life in a well-ordered

This is in contrast to Justin Rose, for whom it seems to have gone wrong. While Garda's progress has seemed to be pre-ordained, Rose's has appeared rushed and unplanned. He turned professional before his 18th birthday when he had not won many amateur events and he had no contracts in place. As is obvious now that he has failed to advance to the third and fourth rounds of all 17 events in which he has competed as a professional, there were flaws in his swing that were not evideni when he was an amateur but have been exposed by the professional game.

Our decision to take Justin to professional golf was very amateur compared with Garcia," Ken Rose, Justin's father and main adviser, said. "Our three-year plan for him to get into the pro ranks was thrown awry by what happened at the Open. When we decided in March last year that Justin was going to turn professional, we had no control over what happened in the Open.

"In March, we did not feel that Justin had any profile. We thought we would let him go and play. We had no commercial arrangements in place when the decision was taken. We thought we would learn it on the hoof. We just went with the flow. Obviously, we did not know the Open vas going to happen."

When one remembers the level of national pride that Rose generated last summer, it is a shame that he has had such troubles since. One hopes they will be resolved. For Garcia, there seem to be no such doubts. This is a week to celebrate. Olazabal is back on his feet, hallelujah; Garcia has the world at his.

SHEEHAN on BRIDGE

By Robert Sheehan, bridge correspondent

In the qualifying round of the Forbo Teams Tournament the Dutch Senior team faced China, winners of the four-way international event. The Seniors were not impressed, and scored a fine victory, whitewashing their opponents. Lock Verhees handled this Three No-Trumps carefully to score a game swing:

Verhees received a friendly heart lead won by the jack in dummy as East followed with a small card. leaving Wes in doubt as to who held the ed. It now looked as if declarer has nine top tricks, but when East showed out no the act of spades Verhees needed an endplay against West in order to succeed.

He confinued with a small club to strip West of his minor-suit exit cards. West took his ace of clubs and switched to the king of diamonds, ducked, and another diamond (a second heart would have worked out far better - the play gets complex but if West had played a second heart, the defence can arrange to avoid the endplays by West unblocking his king

"How can you buy a drink for that traitor," the Manchester United fan snarled, his San Miguel brandished ever closer. In the best journalistic traditions, I made my excuses and left.

The drinking holes will be out of bounds once again this week as the lynch mob reconvenes in even greater numbers in Turin. Some of the fans are on the warpath again and the United chairman, as much as the Juventus supporters, is at the top of their list.

His crime, apart from becoming chairman in the first place, was to say that there will be no money available to Alex Ferguson this summer beyond that needed to replace Peter Schmeichel. "With spending £44 million over the next two seasons developing the ground to a capacity of 67,000 and also on the new training complex at Carrington there will be no more spending like last year [when £28 million purchased Jaap Stam, Dwight Yorke and Jesper Blomqvist]," Edwards said. "We have to make sure we do not go heavily into the red. It is not a bonomless pit, that is the reality of it." Cue howls of outrage.

The criticism will be nothing new to Edwards, who hears little else. and there is no doubt that his timing could have been better. The club has just been named the richest in the world, with a turnover in 1997 of £87.94 million, and supporters want to look forward to the second leg of their European Cup semi-final against Juventus on Wednesday rather than hear tales of hard times. But it has reached the stage where the criticism of Edwards is as demented as the Manchester Evening News poll that demanded Ferguson be fired a year after securing the Double in 1994. It is a fact of life that supporters share no more affinity with a club's board than they do with their bank manager — the responsibility to be prudent makes both appear killjoys — but Edwards is facing a barrage of abuse that goes beyond reason and it is time that the fans acknowl-

If their greatest desire is to see the best players coached by the best manager while they sit in the best ground in the country, then surely they are wallowing in the riches of Croesus at Old Trafford. And the man who has made it possible, if not through his own abilities then through astute delegation, is Edwards.

It was the supporters, after all, who wanted Ferguson dumped in 1989, when the club was underachieving, and it was Edwards who, with the advice of his board, ensured that he stayed. The mair man has probably not been setted on the back too many time for that. "Sack him," they cried as in when Ince, Hughes and Kanchelskis were sold, but, man fally, sanity prevalied among the directors.

It is the way of supporters that they want everything with ways, never more so than when it comes to Old Trafford financing. They want the club to be hugely successful, which Edwards enumed by launching it on the Sock Exchange, and yet they also want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it run by some kindly want it. Those supporters conveniently ignore the fact that many of them were hardly rushing to but their funds into the club when the first share issue was met by an under-

Hindsight is a wonderful thing for those with axes to grind, so Edwards is still criticised for the proposed sale to Michael Knighton for £10 million a decade ago, never mind that it was Knighton, rather than Edwards, who was seen as the screwball at the time. Now he is attacked for accepting a £623 million offer from BSkyB — 40 per cent owned by News International, owner of The Times — that was legally impossible, never mind daft under any rationale, to resist.

There are wider football arguments against the BSkyB takeover, but they make least sense of all from the mouths of United fans who may now, as Edwards's warning over transfer funds suggests,

Expensive tastes: United are not willing to plunge so heavily into the transfer market this summer after allowing Ferguson to spend £28 million to recruit Stam. left, Yorke and Blomqvist lose out. There will be more money to spend than he will admit and his gloomy forecast is more an irritated response to those supporters who opposed the BSkyB deal than a realistic assessment, but the point is made nonetheless — Rupert Murdoch would be allowed heavier spending on players.

So, United will carry on with the same board until the next bid, probably a hostile one, and supporters can rest assured that it is in safe hands. Soaring wages, which have ruined other clubs, have been maintained at sensible levels. The best manager in the country will shortly become the highest-paid.

et still Edwards cannot win. The supporters want big-money signings but whinge that Old Trafford is run more like a corporation than a football club. They complain that the ground needs expanding and yet, when the prices go up to pay for the work — and are still cheaper than many of their rivals' — the chairman is accused of a rip-off. Supporters say he should sell the club and, when he offers to, he is branded a traitor. Then there is the issue of his £90 million worth of shares, which the real supporter would, of course, happily donate to the club. Are they sure?

Despite the fact that he knows more Manchester United trivia than half the Stretford End combined. Edwards will for ever have to live with the accusation that he is not a committed fan. He will probably be told it to his face this week in Turin. So it is no surprise to hear that he is increasingly fired of the day-to-day running of the club and may soon relinquish it for a place on the football board only. Then some other poor soul will become chief executive and get it in the neck for making United the most successful club in the country. It is a thankless task, even if it is a well-paid one.

t is the compelling television image of an English spring — the tide of humanity pouring through the Greenwich Park gates to start the London Marathon. This year 31,583 dared and BBC Television cameras in the air and on the ground transmitted the scene, resembling molten lava gently descending a green mountain, to 102 countries around the world.

The beginning lit up a sombre Sunday morning and four hours of live TV immersed us in the curious interdependence of two opposite compulsions. There are four million who watch, as perhaps they view all things that move on the 20-inch screen in their homes, while 30,000 get out and run until they drop. Fascinating.

David Coleman and company are taxed to deal with its scope. Yesterday, the impression from the armchair was that they served the integrity of the competitive marathons — four simultaneous races in men's and women's elite and in the wheelchair contests — at the expense of the essence that makes London a unique marathon. The live broadcasts gave us more expertise on the few running for money than on the thousands

I don't know how I would divide the airtime any differently. Skimp on the real races and Auntie, having lost some of her sporting jewels, would be accused of losing touch with the marathon. Yet the once-a-year story of so many "ordinary" people inspired, and being inspired, by the music of applause from crowds lining the Docklands and the landmarks of London, was thirtly spread.

We needed more of Chris Moon, a man without half his limbs after a landmine explosion, defying the odds. We should have seen Spencer Oliver, a former boxer on the run from brain damage, pushing himself in aid of the hospital that saved his life. And, yes, the octogenarians who year by year make marathon perseverance appear child's play.

The serious stuff of marathons was won by Africans. Joyce Chepchumba, of Kenya, proved again that skeletal women cannot have it all their own way; with lovely serenity, with sheer bounce in her legs, she strode clear to a $125,000 (about £80,000) bonus for shaving the record time to 2hr 23min 22sec. "That's one priceless second inside the time," Coleman breathed. Actually, we knew its precise worth, and the cash-register mind of Liz McColgan, this year commentating not running, instantly summed up: "She can come back and do it again."

ichard Nerurkar, a British runner who sat this one out on the back of a BBC motorbike, made a miscalculation shared by the leading men, who let Abdelkader El Mouaziz, of Morocco, break away after the pacemakers dropped out. "El Mouaziz is committing suicide," Nerurkar said at the 15-mile post when the "Marrakesh Express" strode two minutes ahead. El Mouaziz had a minute to spare when he finished, waving to the crowd, in 2hr 7min 57sec. His timing had surprised commentators

Behind him, and behind the thrilling finish in the men's wheelchair event, we glimpsed the first wedding on the marathon course, and the marriage of a £15 million fundraising event by thousands doing what they never imagined they could do.

his may seem an inauspicious week to promote the cause of jockeys as role models and marketing tools. One, Graham Bradley, has lost the liberty to ride after being charged with conspiracy to cheat, and a second, Norman Williamson, will later this week be sentenced for a drinkdriving offence considered so serious he has been warned to prepare for imprisonment. The stigma is inevitable and pervasive but it can also be instructive.

Racing rages and squirms, raising its voice in outrage against the perceived pre-judging of Bradley while indulging in a limited confessional. From jockeys to trainers to television pundits, everyone has been conceding that the sport is not incorruptible and that jockeys are not all angels, while insisting the wider picture is a lot cleaner than might be feared.

Outsiders look on at the soul-baring with a mix of bewilderment and fascination but also with a new aware-ness. All of them now know what Bradley looks like. He has earned notoriety, quite possibly undeserved, and with it has come wide recognition.

He will not welcome it right now, for despite his sense of injured innocence he will be feeling pain and humiliation. However, the fact is he has spent 22 years as a jockey, his name familiar and his record distinguished but his features unknown outside the close confines of National Hunt.

Nobody, least of all Bradley. would have chosen this way to show his face to the world. Williamson will be an equally reluctant subject if the harsh penalty threatened by Gloucester magistrates is handed down on Wednesday. This is the last sort of publicity that racing needs. The paradox is that it comes at the very time when the sport is waking up to the untapped potential of lifting the helmets from ockeys' heads and giving

Fifteen years ago, I was instrumental in creating a team of British jump jockeys. It seemed obvious to me that, as this was a rare sport in which we possessed the best in the world, they should be used as an attraction.

It was a generation rich in talent and charisma, exemplified by John Francome and Jonjo O'Neill, and the team concept gave them an identity. They were feted in America. Australia, New Zealand and Europe. At home, the idea fell flat, convention insisting that the jockeys were faceless subordinates to the matter of equine supremacy. Enlightened minds are now looking at this afresh. They are realising that while the primacy of the horse cannot and should not be challenged among those whose back-ground or professioo is racing. a new audience will best be captured by the promotion of the participants who can speak and smile.

On Saturday at Sandown Park, Tony McCoy will duel with Frankie Dettori in a onemile challenge race devised as

They want to relate to the jockeys and we have some of the best in the world."

The theme is striking chords in the offices of the British Horseracing Board (BHB). whose director of communications. Peter Bell, asks: "How many kids' bedroom walls have posters of Dettori or McCoy, compared to Ryan Giggs? Yet these are some of our greatest sporting characters, the type racing needs to promote. We have got to inno-vate, to take the occasional risk and see how it goes, and the best means of reaching out to a new audience is through the people who ride and train acing in Britain is at a similar stage to English cricket before it embraced the one-day game. Of course, innovation has to be measured and monitored, for it can all too easily slide off the scale of acceptability, the search for personalities and the instant ix cheapening the product. But the signs are good.

The Shergar Cup next month, pitting Europe against the Middle East, packages an event attractive to television and all inquisitive sportswatchers. As John Gosden, the trainer, says: "Racing is ohen accused of being fuddy-duddy. We should not be cynical but give our support to a brave new idea."

Slowly, racing is reacting to the need to compete for its space in the leisure market. The best thing about British racecourses is that under-los can enter free. Only now are they realising that it is one thing to let teenagers in, but quite another to show them something that will bring them back. The young want their heroes, and they are more inclined to idolise a jockey than a horse.

RACING: LEOPARDSTOWN CONTEST SHEDS NO FURTHER LIGHT ON 2,000 GUINEAS Jury still out on classic trials

By CHRIS McGrath

A WEEK of muddling classic trials concluded, naturally enough, with the camera required to determine the winner of yesterday's classic audition at Leopardstown. The photograph confirmed that Saffron Waldon had stuck his nose in front of Mus-If in the Icon 2,000 Guineas Trial. Saffron Waldon carries the same colours as last year's Sagitta 2.000 Guineas winner. King Of Kings, and is likewise trained by Aidan O'Brien. With Orpen and Stravinsky also resident at Ballydoyle, however, he will not commit himself to anything until working the trio on Friday. Saffron Waldon scraped home yesterday, receiving 7lh from Mus-If, but O'Brien appears sanguine about Orpen going to the Guineas without a prep" and reports Stravinsky to have "got a lot fitter since he was beaten at the Curragh last menth". Stravinsky is back down to

8-1 for the Guineas with Ladbrokes after the odds-on defeat of Killer Instinct at Newbury on Saturday. Killer Instinct had been promoted to favouritism thanks merely to his ostentatious work on Newmarket Heath, where Henry Cecil has never stressed young horses off the hridle. Sure enough, on Saturday he could not even win a maiden. To some, his bulk as he strolled sleepily round the paddock spoke of the swollen power of a pogilist: to others, however, it

Yet simply hy avoiding the racing public this spring, he now finds himself 41 favourite with William Hill, who offers 5-1 against Enrique Auction House, who worked after racing on Saturday and also goes straight to the classic, is 8-1. The same price is even offered by Ladbrokes against Mujahid, likely to run despite baffling John Dunlop with his tame display in the Craven Stakes. The best remaining value perhaps lies with Compton Admiral and Island Sands, who have at least enhanced their status this spring but are still available at 12-1 with William Hill. Compton Admiral won the Craven over the Guineas course and distance with his usual single, sweeping run, the limits of which remain unknown, while Island Sands is being foolishly neglected for a colt who has evidently flourished for Godolphin.

Line buys Struggles Glory

By Carl Evans

Struggles Glory has been sold to The Winning Line syndicate. In a deal likely to involve a six-figure sum, eight-yearold Struggles Glory will join Venetia Williams later this week subject to a vers inspection.

He is owned by Sussex farmer, David Robinson, 57. who has ridden him in all his British races, including when beaten by Last Option at Cheltenham last Thursday.

Plato earns reward for slick display

BY KEVIN EASON

FORTUNE favours the brave and tason Plato yesterday capitalised on the uncertainty of his rivals to put himself in contention for the Auto Trader British touring car championship (BTCC). While the rest dithered and agonised whether to change tyres as the clouds rolled in over Silverstone. Plato just got on with it. He led from the start of the main feature race and, apart from a fright when he was nudged by the Volvo of Rickard Rydell, the Englishman was never troubled on his way to a surprise victory.

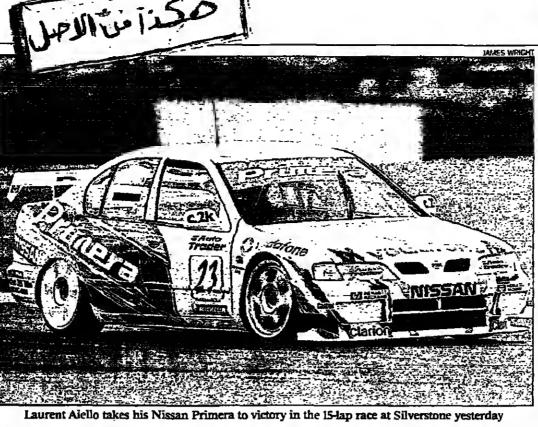

The day provided another boost for the minority contingent of British drivers in this series, with James Thompson doing enough to retain the lead in the overall championship. Plato is second followed Matt Neal, the independent driver who won £250,000 last time out as the first privateer to win a BTCC race. There was no fat cheque yesterday for Neal's Team

Dynamics, just a hard dose of reality and a blown engine. "You have to have bad hick as well as good," Neal said. "So I suppose I had to expect that things might not go entirely my way."

Plato certainly never expected to be so well placed in the championship thanks to a victory that upset the pre-race formbook. The Nissan Primeras had showed remarkable pace all weekend and, after a onetwo in the 15-lap sprint for Laurent Aiello and David Leslie, they were expected to dominate the crucial 30-lap event.

Plato, meanwhile, spent the day playing down his chances, insisting that his Renault Laguna was still not fully prepared after it was late in development over the winter.

Plato, 31, found himself as team leader for this season after Alain Menu, the 1997 champion, joined Ford. Then he arrived at Silverstone in low spirits after the sudden death of his mentor, Martin Sharpe, the head of Mardi Gras Motorsport, who revived Plato's flagging career by putting him into the Renault Spider championship in 1996. Plato went on to win the title, which was the springboard to the Renault touring car team.

"I am so pleased for the team after all that has happened over the winter and then there was the news of Martin," Plato said. "The weather obviously helped today and I had the chance to take advantage." As the cars lined up, the rain forced the brave, like Plato, to play their poker hand, staying on slicks and gamble that they would have enough grip to survive until the track dried. Leslie. Neal and Thompson, however, all came in for intermediate rubber, choosing to start from the pitlane and hoping that they would cut through the field. From fourth on the grid, Plato charged between Rydell and Aiello to grab the lead and stayed there. Behind him, Aiello fell away and Leslie struggled. Neal, too, failed to make headway, although Thompson powered through the back-markers and even a long pistop to take on four fresh slicks failed to hold him back.

After broken steering ended the challenge of Rydell, the champion. Plato just had to stay on the circuit to win. Thompson says he will win the championship if he is consistent. That was his fourth time in the points in four races and that is championship form.

Ecclestone seeks rally revolution

By JEREMY HART

TOMMI MAKINEN, the winner of three world championships, has welcomed the news that Bernie Ecclestone will inject £75 million into motor rallying over the next five years in an attempt to lift the sport's profile closer to that of Formula One.

"I'm very happy to hear that."
Makinen said on the eve of the Catalonia Rally on the Costa Brava. "Rallying needs Mr Ecclestone's input. He has done a great job with Formula One and for some of the success to come to rallying would be fantastic."

In Great Britain, rallying is available only to viewers of Eurosport, the satellite channel, although a deal to show it on BBC television is expected to be signed shortly.

Ecclestone, the Formula One ringmaster, armed with a budget of £15 million a year, will use his let-evision expertise from Formula One to simplify the way in which rallying can be followed. "With Fl. you can see more or less where everyone is." Ecclestone said. We have to try and get that across with rallying. I plan to have a central place for the rally to be based, then have the rally cars foltowl one route one day and later come back down the one they've just gone up."

Another new proposal is the televising of some of the final timed stages that make up a rally, offering three world championship points to the stage winner and a chance to reinstate cars that may have previously retired. The first of these events will be aired during the Corsica Rally next month. "Rallying has the potential to be a good product." Ecclestone said. "Nothing is a threat to Fl, but rallying is completely different. I don't know if it's going to work, but I didn't know what the potential of Fi was before I started."

In Spain yesterday, Colin McRae declared his new slimline Ford Focus a potential winner of the Catalonia Rally. Ford have shaved 40 kilos from the car that the Spain drops to victory in Vanada and the Vanada and the Spain drops to victory in Vanada and the Vanada and the Vanada and the Vanada and the Vanada and the Vanada the Scot drove to victory in Kenya and Portugal to make it more competitive on the mountain roads north of Barcelona. The difference is quite marked." McRae. who is suffering from flu, said. "The weight saved makes it better under braking and acceleration."

If McRae is off lile pace, there are three drivers capable of stealing the limelight. Makinen is a former winner in Spain, as is Carlos Sainz, of Spain, while the Suburu of Richard Burns should be suited to the tarmac.

MAMERICAN FOOTBALL: Scottish Claymores left it late to win their opening game of the NFL Europe season against Rhein Fire at Murrayfield yesterday (Richard Wetherell writes), A six-yard touchdown run by Dameyune Craig, their quarterback, with less than two minutes remaining, brought the scores level at 20-20 and Rob Hart, an Englishman, kicked the conversion to secure victory against the champions.

It was the only time that the Claymores were in front. They fell 7-0 behind in the first quarter, but Yo Murphy caught a 29-yard pass from Craig to level the scores. Fire went 20-7 ahead, but Matt Finkes brought Claymores back with a touchdown, which Hart converted, and Craig's touchdown and Hart's kick clinched it.

SWIMMING: China's preparations for the Olympic Games in Sydney in 2000 are concentrated on taking a "clean squad" to Sydney, even at the expense of gold medals, a high-ranking sports official told Chinese state media said yesterday. The national swimming associatioo's target is for China's representatives to win one gold medal in the women's events and any medal in the men's. China's women swimmers won one gold, three silver and two bronze at the 1996 Games.

E REAL TENNIS: Penny Lumley, the world champion, underlined her dominance when she retained the Harvey Joseph British Open women's title at Holyport, beating Kae Leeming, the Australian professional, in straight sets (Sally Jones writes). Lumley, on her home court, did not drop a set throughout the event and outrallied Charlotte Cornwallis, the much-improved British professional, in the semi-finals.

TENNIS: Felix Mantilla, right, defeated Karim Alami, of Morocco, 7-6, 6-3, 6-3, to win the Barcelona Open yesterday and delight the home crowd. Mantilla took a 4-0 lead over Alami, the world No 83, before the Moroccan recovered to force a tie-break. In the second set. Mantilla broke for 5-3 to claim the set and the Spaniard took the third in similar style

CYCLING: Frank Vandenbroucke fulfilled his billing as Belgium's most exciting talent since Eddy Merckx with victory in the oldest one-day classic of the professional season, the Liège-Bastogne-Liège race, yesterday. Vandenbroucke, consistently highly placed in the spring classics this year. attacked six kilometres from the finish in the Liège suburbs to claim his first win in the race.

■ NETBALL: Bedfordshire have won the inter-county tournament for the first time, beating Derbyshire 17-15 in the final at the Acklam Sports Centre in Middlesbrough yesterday (Cathy Harris writes). It was third time lucky for Bedfordshire after beating Middlesex, the holders, in the semi-final, while Derbyshire beat Essex Met, the pre-tournament favourites.

CRICKET: Glenn McGrath, the Australia pace bowler, twisted his ankle in the third one-day international defeat by West Indies on Saturday and was ruled out of the fourth meeting yesterday. West Indies went 2-l up in the seven-match series as Jimmy Adams, Sherwin Campbell and Carl Hooper made half-centuries in West Indies' successful chase for a target of 243, reached with five wickets and an over to spare.

THE Flora London wheelchair marathon saw the closest finish in the 17-year history of the event, with Heinz Frei, of Switzerland, hanging onto his title by just one second.

Jeannot Joel, of France, competing in London for the first time, applied the pressure from the start and Frei, the world record-holder, attempting to win the London crown for the fourth time, was relieved to hold off the fierce challenge.

Approaching the halfway point at Tower Bridge, Frei seemed to get on terms but the lead continued to switch hands regularly and the pair were level when they entered The Mail.

That the title would be decided by a head-to-head sprint for the line had looked inevitable for a long time before. Frei won by the width of a wheel in thr 35min 27sec, nine seconds outside the course record he set last year. But, throughout the entire 26 miles

THE GOOD UNIVERSITY GUIDE

Choosing a course becomes ever more confusing. John O'Leary offers help

hoosing a university place was never easy, but it has become even more confusing in recent years. Not only are more courses available, but prospective students are bombarded by glitzy promotional material and a wealth of advice on where to find the cheapest pint of beer and the coolest nightclubs. The only information that is lacking is how the universides compare academically.

The Good University Guide, which will run all this week in The Times, is an attempt to fill that gap. Alone among the guides that now pack the bookstores and newsstands, it offers a pointer to the best degree programmes in a growing range of subjects, as well as ranking whole univer-

Over the next four days, the guide will provide informadon on the top courses in more than 40 subjects and on choosing between Oxford and Cambridge colleges, examine the opportuniões for work experience and offer advice on the annual scramble for student accommodation. The series will culminate on Friday with the 1999 edicon of the original university league table.

Not surprisingly, the intro-duction of tuloon fees for fulltime undergraduates has prospective students even more discriminating about their choice of course and wary about whether to take a degree at all. Though the collapse in applications predicted by some critics has not materialised, subject choices seem to have been affected.

Mindful of the competition for graduate jobs, applicants are looking for quality and also gravitating towards the more vocational subjects. The pattern established in Australia, which began charging for higher education more than a decade ago, is being repeated in Britain. Computing and some branches of engineering are experiencing a boom as teacher training and some arts subjects struggle.

The latest statistics from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (Ucas), published on Friday, show a 2.5 per cent drop in the number of applications for higher education courses: almost 20,000 fewer than at the end of

The rewards of academic application: undergraduates from Durham University on their way to receiving their degrees

March 1998. But the decline is due entirely to the continuing reluctance of mature students to commit themselves to extra expense and, to a lesser extent, the drying-up of previously fertile markets in South-East Asia and the Republic of Ire-Applications from British

crease, as they did last year There are only 245 more out of 284,000, but the relief among ministers was palpable, not least because they have planned for 36,000 more students in October. Baroness Blackstone, the Education and Employment Minister, said: These figures clearly demonstrate the continuing strong demand that exists for higher education and that the reforms we introduced to provide proper funding and allow for the expansion of higher education were right."

Tony Higgins, the chief executive of Ucas, said: "The drop in the number of mature applicants is disappointing, but the Government's recent announcement of initiatives to widen participation among mature applicants and disadvantaged groups should help to tackle this and is to be welore than 20,000 of the new places will be for part-timers. who have always paid fees and whose applications have not shown the same decline as those for full-time courses. Universities are also being offered incentives to recruit more students from poor backgrounds, something higher education as a whole has failed to do despite the dramatic expansion of student numbers over the past 20 years.

Most universities will have some extra Government-funded places under the £75 million scheme to widen participation, but some with an overwhelmingly middle-class intake will receive only a handful, while others are allocated several hundred.

Apart from the Open Uni-versity, Sheffield Hallam will be the biggest winner, but most of its 1,595 additional places will not be at full-time degree level. The largest allocation of full-time degree places will be at Nottingham University, where a new campus opens this year. Almost 1,000 extra places will be funded. easing the pressure slightly on the most sought-after courses in the higher education system. There are 14 applications to each place and entry requirements are among the highest in Britain. Hull University is next on the provisional allocation agreed by the Higher Educa-tion Funding Council for England, with almost 978 new places. The exercise will be repeated for entry in 2000. The indications are that there will be a place somewhere in the higher education for most of those hoping to start a course this year or next. but competition for the top degrees will be as fierce as ever. Careful preparation and investigation of all the options will be needed to ensure the best possible chance of success with the top courses.

• For Internet users, the guide will remain available on The Times website (http://www. the-times.co.uk). An expanded paperback version, with profiles of each university and details of their teaching quality assessment, will be published at the end of the month.

LEEDS University is the top choice of candidates for this autumn's higher education places, according to the latest figures issued by admissions officers, John O'Leary writes. But De Montfort University has registered by far the biggest rise in applications.

The big civic universities, with their wide range of courses, always attract the largest number of applications. But their popularity has dipped this year, with applications down by more than 10 per cent in some cases. Although Leeds had experienced a marginal decline when the statistics were sent to universities last month, the university has replaced Manchester as the most common choice for 1999.

A group of former polytechnics is now dosing in on the civic universities. Sheffield Hallam, for example, was one of only eight universities with more than 30,000 applications when the statistics were compiled. It was fewer than 2,000 behind Sheffield University, compared with more than 5,000 on the same date in 1998.

De Montfort University, based in Leices-ter but with campuses in Bedford, Lincolnshire and Milton Keynes, is another closing in on the traditional leaders. It already has more applications than Liverpool, for example, having registered an increase of almost 20 per cent in a year.

Two of the youngest universities have also recorded big rises, albeit on much smaller bases, Lincolnshire and Humberside, which opened its Lincoln campus only two years ago, has seen a 14 per cent in-ercase in applications this year, and Abertay — the last Scottish university to be established — is not far behind, with 13.5

At the other end of the table, two other former polytechnics are struggling. Luton, the last English university to join the ranks, has seen applications fall by almost a quarter. Thames Valley University, which was the subject of a highly critical report by the Quality Assurance Agency, is down by almost a fifth. The University of Wales, Lampeter, has experienced the biggest decline n percentage terms, but the small size of the college can exaggerate the size of such

The table below is very different from last year's, which saw Thames Valley record the iggest increase in applications and Buckingham the biggest decline. Thames Valley subsequently missed its recruitment targets, incurring a fine from the funding council. Only an action plan agreed by the council last Friday has rescued the university from sections financial difficulties.

The applications statistics have always been a jealously guarded secret at this time of year, with universities fearing that poor carty figures could deter those still to make a decision. From this month, however, they are to be published regularly by the Univer-sities and Colleges Admissions Service.

courses who are aged under 50, and now those between 50 and 54 who plan to return to work after studying, will be entitled to about three quarters of the maximum loan available. However, eligibility for the remaining quarter of the loan will be means-tested and whether or not you receive this will depend on your income or, for school-leavers, that of your family. Those who are disqualified by the means-test will be restricted to £3,360 for a full year in London and £2,727 elsewhere if they are living away from home. The equivalent for those living at home will be £2,167.

upplementary grants may be available for some students to top up the loans to the previous level the maintenance grants. The main beneficiaries will be disabled students, those with dependants, those incurring travel costs in certain circumstances and those leaving care to enter higher education.

Again, your LEA will handle applications for these allowances. All these grants are means-tested, except those for disabled students. Exact details of who will qualify are available from your LEA, or from the Department for Education and Employment, whose leaflet Financial Support for Students in 1999-2000 is available by phoning 0800-731 9133.

If you can convince your university or college of your oeed. you may be entitled to a hardship loan of £250 a year, repayable in the same way as the student loan. Similarly, you may apply to your university or college for a limited amount of help from their access fund.

any students and their families find tuition fees and living costs a burden, but almost 200 British students go to the European Business School, in Central London, where the fees are £8,000 a year. The minimum entry requirement is two A levels and the ability to pay the fees, which does scare off many applicants

The school says that its stu-dents, one in five of whom is British, earn £25,000 after graduating from the four-year course, which includes a year's work experience. They can double that within four years of leaving.

Not all have private means or wealthy parents to pick up the tab. Claire Lee, who is in her first year, left her sixthform college in Hampshire without the necessary grades to secure her place at Edinburgh University. She ended up working in Japan before learning of EBS. Her well-heeled parents balked at the fees after 12 years of paying for independent schooling, so while in Japan Ms Lee started exporting cars to Britain via the Internet. With that and some language teaching, the first year's fees were raised. This summer she returns to Japan to work as a personal assistant for three months.

ABF management under microscope

COMPANIES

ASSOCIATED BRITISH FOODS: ABF starts the week's reporting of results with the publication of its interim figures today.

The numbers are likely to be pretty dull. Henderson Crosthwaite, the stockbroker with a strong reputation for its coverage of food companies, expecis the group to make £194 millon for the six months to last March. In the comparable previous period, it made t193

However, observers will look keenly for signs of change in the management approach. Garry Weston, chairman and chief executive of the group since 1967 and the man who invented Wagon Wheels, told shareholders last December that Peter Jackson - who currently heads ABF's British Sugar arm - would step up into the chief executive role. In addition, ABF disclosed at the end of March that it was appoining John Bason as finance director. The post had been vacant before his appointment However, Mr Jackson does not take up his postion until June, and Mr Bason - formerly with the packaging group Bunzl - does not start until

May. ABF has a long and strong track record. However, its shares have suffered in recent months as doubts circulated about the impact of the strong pound on its profitability.

The group sells many prod-ucts — including Kingsmill bread, Silver Spoon sugar and Twinings teas - through the supermarkets, and the stores have kept their suppliers in a vice-like price grip.

ABF also has about £1.4 billion of cash. There may be news about plans to use this money on acquisitions — per-haps in the US and on higher added-value ingredients products. However, with interest rates on the downward path over the past six months, the income from this pile of cash is likely to have fallen - a fact that exerts more pressure on ABP's profitability.

It is thought that the dividend will edge up to 4.5p.

DEBENHAMS: After being crowned Retailer of the Year in the Retail Week awards two months ago, Debenhams will have much to live up to when it returns its interim results tomorrow.

Terry Green, who has been chief executive of the department store company since its demerger from Burton Group last year, has already given warning that underlying sales were down 2.5 per cent over the Christmas period, with to-tal sales down 1.4 per cent. However, City analysts be-lieve that the underlying decline will have steadied to 2 per cent in recent weeks, with total sales up by 1.8 per cent. The company will have made heavy price cuts to shift unwanted Christmas stock, which is certain to have taken its toll of profit margins. BT Alex Brown, the broker, expects profits of £77.7 million for the six months to February, against £77.1 million last time. Earnings per share should creep up by O.lp. to

BANK OF SCOTLAND: The group looks poised to report annual profits of more than £1 billion, up 37 per cent, on Wednesday. The profits will be boosted by a £164 million gain on the sale of the Countrywide Bank of New Zealand. However, underlying profits are still expected to have increased by year, with a final payment of 7.4p. The bank is also expected to give more details of its link-13 per cent. Group costs are forecast to come in at £998 million. Provisions are expected to fall,

ICI: The chemicals group is likely to strengthen calls for more disposals with the release of its first-quarter results on Thursday. The embattled company, which is trying to convince investors that a heavy restructuring programme is the panacea for its ills, is expected to announce a 56 per cent slump in pre-tax profits, to £38 million, for the three months. The company is in the throes of switching from commodity chemicals to specialty products. It is sure to use last week's £1.7 billion sale of a string of businesses as evidence that this process is well under way.

However, this deal alone is unlikely to have appeased the market. Huge net debt, slower growth in industrial markets and the Asian malaise still mar ICI's trading outlook.

BT Alex Brown, the broker, says that profits from ICI's core businesses are likely to have risen by 5 per cent in the first quarter, but that the gains will be wiped out by a profit plunge of £40 million in industrial chemicals.

AUSTIN REED: The extent of the tough times on the high street will be evident in Austin Reed's full-year profit result. due to be released on Friday. The menswear retailer is tipped to report a 29 per cent drop in pre-tax earnings, to £6 million, after adjustments for

uals in January last year. The company disclosed in January that like-for-like retail sales in the second half were down 12 per cent. Adjusted earnings per share are forecast to drop from 18.5p to 13.1p, though the net dividend is expected to be steady at 7.5p.

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

s the UK economy sinking into recession? After 0.1 per cent growth in the last quarter of 1998. markets and ministers will watch the estimate of first quarter gross domestic product on Friday. Median City's forecast is for repeat 0.t per cent growth but HSBC looks for 0.2 and Paribas sees 0.3 per cent. March retail sales, due on Thursday, are seen rising 0.2 per cent, but optimists see a lot more.

In a busy week for UK statistics, tomorrow's public finance figures are least predictable. A consensus £6.9 million deficit in March UK would leave the annual surplus on the Chancellor's PSNCR measure £5 billion higher than be predicted in the Budget.

March producer prices today and retail inflation to-morrow should show little underlying change. Recov-ery in oil is expected to push March input prices back up by I per cent but make little difference to out-put price inflation of 0.2 per cent year on year. The RPIX measure of consum-er price inflation is likely to be back up to 27 per cent but falling mortgage rates could leave headline inflation unchanged at 21.

On Wednesday, average earnings growth may re-treat again from 4.3 to 4.1 per cent in January while unemployment will likely be up by 6.000-10.000. Watch the April Monetary Policy Committee minutes to see if members split over the rate cut.

Employees: 5,500. Business areas: Misys supplies software for the banking industry — both retail and commercial - on a worldwide basis as well as for the insurance industry in the UK and the medical profession in the US.

THE BOARD

Kevin Lomax, chairman. was one of the founders of Misys in 1979. His background is industrial, being a managing director of a subsidiary of Hanson, and later a director of the Hanson-backed Manufacturing and Trading Company. He was nonexecutive chairman of Misys from 1980 to 1985, and has been executive chalr-

Stone Macpherson, deputy chairman, is a former merchant banker at Robert Fleming.

Howard Evans, finance director, joined last year from Courtaulds, where he had also been finance director. He replaced Ross ham who had been finance director since Misys floated in 1987 but is now corporate development di-

Mike O'Leary, who has with Misys since 1986, runs the insurance and information systems side, white John Sussens, a former polytechnic lecturer who later worked with Lomax at Central Manufactur-Ing and Trading Company, is managing director of the rest of the group.

Among the non-executives, Misys boasts a genuine rocket scientist. George Gray started his career as a spacecarft design engineer at RCA in Canada. He led the management buyout of RCA's service division which became Serco, a UK-listed company.

Tony Alexander, the senior non-executive, was a colleague of Lomax's at Hanson, rising to become chief operating officer be-fore its demerger.

Misys's success as a flash in the pan. The banking, insurance and medical software group has enjoyed a staggering rise in its financial fortunes during the latter part of the 1990s, its shares rose tenfold in three years, peaking last summer after Misys joined the FTSE 100.

Then the Cassandras attacked, claiming that the company was benefiting overly from work to deal with the launch of the euro and the year 2000 bug, and that valuations in information technology had gone too far anyway. Misys's value dropped and the company was ejected from the FTSE 100. But it recovered to make a return this year.

Although Kevin Lomax. Misys's founder and chairman, claims he does not worry overly about the fluctuations in the company's share price. he is determined to ensure the group becomes a permanent fixture in the index of Britain's leading companies.

Dealing with the second issue first - Mr Lomax points out that British IT companies tend to be less highly rated than equivalent US companies and that Misys is less highly rated that some of its peers. such as Logica or Sema.

The company is considering starting an ADR program in the US. This is less to help Misys's rating, as a quarter of its shares are already owned by US institutions, than to enable it to offer shares for US acquisitions and to US-based staff as part of the company's widespread share incentive

As for the former worry -Mr Lomax claims that the euro and year 2000 issues affect only the company's banking software side, although this currently contributes 58 per cent of Misys's revenues and 73 per cent of profits.

He admits freely that the euro gave Misys a big one-off boost during 1998. "We went live with 300 banks on January 4," he says. "The euro was a one-off and lifted revenues above normal growth rates. There was a 40 per cent growth during 1998, while we think the more normal growth rate will be 20 per cent per an-

The year 2000 bug will also bring abnormal growth - although Misys does no work solving year 2000 problems for banks. It is simply that many banks have junked old systems and started afresh as way of dealing with the bug. This will push growth rates to 30 per cent this year.

However, in spite of this massive increase in spending. Mr Lomax sticks with his 20 per cent growth prediction in Misys's banking business. CORPORATE PROFILE: Misys

Kevin Lomax, chairman, above left, is determined that Misys will become a permanent fixture in the index of Britain's companies. The banking, insurance and medical software group is developing an Internet product, called Screentrade, and is a leading player in America with +Medic

And this is the reason why. Mr Lomax argues that most of the IT spending by banks over the past two years has been to repair what they already have. They have not been spending on new technology either to improve service or cut costs. This has, however, allowed new entrants to the market - such as Prudential Corporation or Standard Life in the UK - to attack their market.

The banks' reaction to this is either to invest in new product or to merge with their rivals. Either of these two events tends to help Misys. For example, when UBS and Swiss Bank Corporation merged, the company decided that it had to integrate its private banking systems. The two computer systems the banks used were not compatible, so a whole new system is being built based on Misvs software.

The other point Mr Lomax makes is that the experience of the year 2000 bug has made banks realise that having scores of in-house engineers developing proprietary computer systems is simply a waste of time, energy and money, producing half-baked solutions that do not always work. Banks are fed up with being a beta test site for their own products," Mr Lomax argues. "It is more sensible to buy a product that is already working in 60 or 70 other sites."

Misys covers the whole In the US it has a strong pres-ence in the trading and wholeto take it in to US retail banking, and hopes to find a compabanking waterfront in Europe. from retail banking to futures trading and risk management. sale lending side - particular-ly after last year's purchase of the CATS risk management software business in California. Misys is looking for a deal

WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"Like a lot of really great stocks, Misys has spent its life climb ing a wall of scenticism. However, the company does overcome this scepticism because it is so well run. Kevin Lomax runs this company to make money, not to change the world. Misys is the Harvard Business School of the technology sector." Keith Woolcock, Nomura

"It is a market leader in the retail and investment banking sector. There is a very strong management culture of cash, cash, cash, which is essential for a company which does not have

ny such as CATS, a small, fastowing business that can benefit from Misvs's salesforce and distribution network.

Although banking is the bed-rock upon which Misys was built, the company has developed two other business areas insurance and medical. The insurance business is almost completely UK based. It started off supplying software for independent financial advisers, and has developed with an automated quotation finder for insurance and assurance products, and more general IFA outsourcing products.

These days about two-thirds of the revenues from the business are from transactions that Misys does for IFAs. Misys is now developing this further with an Internet insurance product called Screentrade. Customers call it up on their PCs, type in their details and it finds the best car or home insurance deal. It is growing at 30 per cent per month and Misys plans to expand it to add banking and investment products.

Mr Lomax is keen not to get overexcited about Screentrade. "It's a classic Internet business," he jokes. "It loses money.

Misys's third leg - the irritatingly named +Medic - is completely different. Purchased in November 1997 for a total of £580 million, it is almost entirely based in the US, supplying patient, prescrip-tion and office management systems for doctors' practices. This is potentially a massive market, with more than 600,000 physicians working in the US and healthcare representing 14 per cent of the country's annual spending - a higher proportion than any other leading nation. Of this, about 30 per cent is paid for by the Federal government, although Medicare and Medicaid and the rest is private sector, with most of that paid by insurance schemes or employers. The insurers and government are trying to control costs, so they want better records of what doctors are spending before they pay the bills. +Medic is one of three leading players supplying the physicians systems. These are just the sort of market conditions that appeal to Misys - where the customers need to spend money on software because they are being pressed to control costs elsewhere.

The market is not too sure. and marked Misys shares down sharply earlier this year. after a similar run on one of the big US medical groups.

Indeed there are many in the market only too willing to search oul a bear story on Misys. This is because the company has grown largely by acouisition - indeed the original Misvs businesses are no longer part of the group, having been sold off as "non-core" last History indicates that purchasing software companies is not always a successful enterprise. After all, software engineers tend not to be like most other business people, often being motivated by creativity rather than wealth creation. Also there are low barriers to entry in the software market. so companies such as Misys always face the danger of their own employees setting up in

However, as Mr Lomax and many of the team come from outside the software industry, they have a different way of do-

Misys has a Hanson-style financial reporting bible for all divisional managers to make sure that cash is managed tightly within the group. Rivals say that Misys profit margins are well above what should be expected, but analysts argue that this is because Misys is more professional than most of its rivals.

The Cassandras will continue to worry about Misys, but the group's financial performance speaks for itself.

PROPERTY surveyors could be swamped by a wave of litigation as a result of the Government's attempts to speed up the homebuving process, according to a leading reinsurer.

Under government proposals, set to become law next year, homeowners will have to prepare a "buyer's pack" containing a survey and other details of a property before putting it up for sale. This is expected to cost them between £300 and £500. Although the reform will create a huge business opportunity for surveyors, it will also open them up to legal action from buyers, sellers and mortgage lenders if things go wrong according to CNA Re, a reinsurer which pronew hospitals.

The PFI — or public/private partnership as Labour now prefers to call it — has long been a controversial issue with unions who complain that job security and conditions are less favourable in private employment than in the public sector. They also believe that while the PFI may be a cheap way to fund public building in the short term, it is an expen-sive one in the long term because the Government faces contioued bills from private

Labour has spent months lobbying union leaders on the dangers for its electoral cam-conference becomes a platform for the Government's criocs.

Bill Spiers, General Secre-tary of the STUC, said that while the Scottish union movement was opposed in principle to the PFI, it recognised that there may be a way forward with new frameworks guaran-teeing working conditions.

"We have to work as constructively as we can within the realities we are faced with," he said. Anne Middleton. STUC President, said it would be wrong to burden a new Scottish parliament with a huge bill for public building. Labour, however, still faces heavy criticism from union members when the issue is debated on Wednesday. One amendment to a motion opposing the PFI calls for a moratorium on all new projects.

Laura Ashley is believed to have approached a number of potential buyers of the US busi-ness, which is thought to be losing as much as £1 million per month.

The Rev Pat Robertson, the American television evangelisi and businessman, has recently joined the board of Laura Ashley, which is now dominated by managers from MUI, the Malaysian conglomerate that bailed it out last year. Laura Ashley's annual results have to be released by the end of April, and the company hopes to be able to announce the sale of its US business at the same time. It has already sold some US stores, and has been left with 130 others.

Ann Iverson, a previous chief executive of Laura Ashley, had a policy of opening large stores in US shopping malls, but they have performed particularly poorly.

Fear for small firms | David Lloyd Leisure in pension reform steps up expansion

THE Confederation of British Industry has warned the Gov-ernment that its plans for stakeholder pensions will place an unreasonable burden on smaller companies (Gavin Lumsden writes). Stakeholder plans are expected to arrive in 2001. They will be designed to be cheap and flexible in order to encourage an extra eight million people to save for their retirement. Companies that do not run pension schemes for their staff will be obliged to choose a stakeholder plan into which employees can pay. Contribufrom pay by the employer. The CBI believes that the government proposals will ef-fectively force smaller employ-ers to act as financial advisers to staff although they lack the skills or experience. The organisation says that people should choose their own stakeholder. It wants the Government to set up a clearing house to which employers could direct payment from employees.

The CBI also opposes plans to require all company pension schemes to have trustees. This would raise costs, it says.

seek it everywhere. They won't find much sign of infladon, though, in today's snapshot of the prices manufacturers are paying for their inputs and receiving for their products, both of which are falling. Even so, tomorrow's retail prices index (RPI) will doubtless still show prices rising. Where this inflation is coming from speaks volumes about the sharp divisions in the modern economy.

In fact, tomorrow's inflation figures will be more than usually confusing. The headline rate is likely to fall sharply to just over 2 per cent, reflecting the effects of mortgage rate reductions, while the rate excluding mortgage interest payments, the so-called underlying rate, or RPIX, which is the measure for which the Government has a target of 25 per cent, is likely to rise sharply to about 2.8 per cent. This reflects the impact of indirect tax increases announced in the Budget. Confused? It gets worse. The measure which excludes indirect taxes, namely RPIY, will probably come in at about 1.7 per cent.

This reveals where a good part of current inflation is coming from, namely the Government itself, in the shape of increases in indirect taxes on road fuel and tobacco, as well as increases in the council tax.

(Someone should ask John Prescott to explain the difference at the next Question Time.) But even if you use the more favourable geometric mean, and take out indirect taxes, you still get the resull that prices are rising at some I per cent a year. coming from rapacious retailers. Their margins may or may not be high but it is difficult to believe that margin increases are behind the cononuing (albeit modest) inflation. Indeed, on average, excluding alcoholic drink and tobacco, the prices of goods sold in the high street are falling. Clothing and footwear prices have been falling by about 2 per cent a year, while leisure goods have been falling even faster. Moreover, surveys of retailers' expectations confirm that they expect this trend to continue. Outside the high street, other key prices are falling. Motor cars, that symbol of Sixties affluence and status, are now falling in price.

So where is the inflation? Food prices have been rising a bit, mainly driven by the seasonal component, and household goods have been rising slightly. The real culprits, however, are not goods at all but services. The price of services has been rising at more than 3 per cent a year, even as goods

They seem to have founded cioes and traded with the nomadic tribes to the north, with whom they eventually interbred and by whom they were absorbed. Their distinctive weaving skills (the first mrtans and plaids) are now long lost.

The Learning Tower of Pisa is one of the wonders of the world, the most famous listing listed building, and, as this film reminds us, one of the world's most puzzling phenomena. For eight centuries it has defied gravity and, it would appear, was tilting from the start, since its builders had to incorporate corrections even before it was completed. They were operating beyond the limits of their technology and had chosen a position on silty soil, with a water table just inches below the surface. This is an account of how a present-day committee of experts (all adamantly refusing to accept their colleagues views) almost brought the structure crashing down but, thanks to the sole Briton involved, may now have given Pisa an extra 300 years of tourist revenue by slightly correcting the lean.

Not all music-makers are in favour of 17th and 18th-century works being played on original instru-ments of the period or on reconstructions of them. And yet controversy has done nothing to diminish the success of the Academy of Ancient Music, the ensemble founded in 1973 by Christopher Hogwood. Tonight's live concert from St John's, Smith Square, celebrates the Academy's 25th season. It's a rerun of a feast of Handel music given 250 years ago in aid of London's Foundling Hospital for orphaned and deprived children. Handel was one of the hospital's most generous benefactors. In tonight's interval (8.10), Hogwood joins a distinguished panel to discuss the 20th-century employment of period instruments.

THE BIG H BIKE RIDE

FROM HAMPTON COURT PALACE TO HOVE • SUNDAY 4 JULY 1999 TWO WONDERFUL RIDES OF 30 OR 60 MILES

THE Big 'H' is an exciting and exclusive Charity Bike Ride designed to give hope and help to disadvantaged children and people with learning disabilities. The 60 mile Ride begins at Hampton Court Palace and the 30 mile route starts in Colgate. You will cycle through some of the most picturesque scenery in southern England all the way down to Hove where you will receive a hero's reception at the finish.

The Ride is fully supported with roadside refreshments, signposts, marshals and mechanics. In return we ask you to support the people for whom we care by obtaining as much sponsorship as possible.

Parking facilities are available at Hampton Court and coaches will depart regularly from Hove to bring you and your bike back to the start. It would be great if your family can meet you in Hove

So get on your bike now and ring Jane Jaffe on 0181 420 6834.

Two aspects of a changing Moscow: a homeless woman sleeping in a modern bus shelter bearing advertising for cigarettes and potential shopping centre encapsulate the freewheeling spirit that has swept Russia since the old icons fell. Walker, who has spent six drome - racing by satellite years here, is one of the new breed of investors to target the former Soviet Union, However, political and economic uncertainty and an anti-Western backlash over the Balkan crisis make for difficult times. Nato's action has gone down badly. Police guard the paint-splattered US embassy. Sabre-rattling in the Kremlin and faltering steps to impeach President Yeltsin make for a peculiarly Russian brew.

Yet, on first sight, life in Moscow seems anything but traught. This is a city of boulevards and space, far from the forbidding Iron Curtain image. The crowds strolling in Red Square could be the residents of any Western city. Where are the Russian maliosi, waiting to gun down unsuspecting foreigners?

Moscow's ambitious mayor, Yuri Luzkhov. has embraced privatisation, sparking a construction boom and opening doors to gambling. Western banks have funded projects ranging from a ring road to shops and offices. The rouble may be worthless, but the evidence is well hidden.

Walker recalls: "When I first came here in the early Nineries. the thing that struck me about Moscow was how dark it was. Street after street of black walls, with no lights. no shops. Now, it's London, it's Paris. it's New York. It's just like any major city."

Yet doing business here undoubtedly has its own rules. Russians are sensiove to cridcism, and value actions above words. Last August, in the midst of the currency crisis. Walker signed a lease on new offices in downtown Moscow. He says: "When everybody else was getting out, I was coming in. and it's stood me in very good stead. Here, it's a question of who you are and can you perform: can you do what you say you're going to do?" Russia has proved a stamping ground for UK business names out to start afresh. Sir Rocco Forte, rendered jobless (but rich) in 1996 when Forie fell to Granada, runs two hotels in St Petersburg, including the five-star Asioria. A spokesman says: "Business has been picking up despite the economic situation, but most of our plans are on hold." Other regular visitors include Kevin Maxwell and his brother lan, consultants to potential investors. Karl Johansson, managing partner in Ernst & Young in Moscow, says that business dynamics shifted with the rouble crisis. "August was a defining moment, because everyone's hopes and expectations were for a continuing improvement in investment opportunities," he says. "But with the rouble, and a lack of confidence in the Government not honouring its debts, companies are not looking to make major investments, but are rather maintaining what they have." Johansson agrees that Moscow looks far from depressed. The paradox is that it does not have the appearance one would expect from press coverage," he says. "There have been bank failures, but many people operate outside the banking system. It's not the same as in Asia, where there was a lot more social unrest." Johannson sees red tape as an issue - "you have to work to get things done" - but says that many ills of Russian life, such as mob wars, have been overstated, "Moscow, at least personally, is as safe as any city in the US." he says. "There is violence, but it lends to be Russian-to-Russian."

The US is the largest source of direct investment in Russia. Coca-Cola is putting up to $800 million (£500 million) into new bottling plants. Johannson says: "There is a lot of potential here, but the structural reforms that are needed — financial, tax and legal — have not occurred at the pace expected. We've got to have a climate that allows for more efficient investment."

For Walker, at any rate, Rus-

the horses and dogs. Walker insists that he has met no problems with Russian mobsters, although someone once pulled a gun on him in a dispute over an airline seat. He gets on well with Russians, with his tough East End manner and boxer's physique."I've never been threatened or intimidated," he says. "I've encountered nothing but friendship." His right-hand man, Konstantin Batchkala, was a former rising star in the Communist youth movement.

As for Moscow's Hippodrome. Walker is hopeful of repeating his success of 25 years ago, when he built the UK's then-biggest shopping centre, Brent Cross, on the site of a greyhound track in North London. He has started selling the idea to Moscow's authorities.

A former East End boxer bringing shopping mails to Moscow? In the new Russia. anything is possible.

A tale of one man's fantasy lived to the full

'The History Hour" (too short) and 'The History Period" (wrong connotations) and they already had a "Comedy Zone". "Zone" sounds hip, futurisric, dangerous, and "Two Hours When We Run All Our Historical Series One After Another" doesn't hit the spot. So we got "The History Zone"

Why stop there? All the environmental programmes could go in The Ozone Zone". The History Channel could bung its few programmes which are not about warfare into "The Demilitarised Zone". All those wheel-clamping neighbours from hell could go into ITV's "Residents' Parking Zone".

"The History Zone" is part of the BBC's return to Reithian values, apparently, but I doubt if the canny old Puritan would have been impressed by this scheduleshuffling and slapping on a sexy new label - rearranging the docufall on merit. fronically, the centrepiece of the first "History Zone" was about a man who changed his name and not only pretended to be, but actually became, something much more interesting than he was in the first place. Grey Owl: The Great White Hoax (BBC2, Friday), the Timewatch biography of this remarkable fantasist, would have been worth watching however it was packaged. Born in 1888 to a mother who was barely 16 and an alcoholic, bankrupt, absent father, Archie Belaney was brought up by disapproving maiden aunts in Hastings. Obsessed by yarns of "Red Indians" he emigrated to Canada at 17 and headed for the wilderness in search of adventure. His first Native American wife taught him how to fish and trap beaver. Beaver became a central

He had a natural rapport with animals and could, apparently, "attract a moose". He changed his name to Grey Owl. dyed his skin and, under the influence of his third wife, a Native American called Anahereo, became a proto-ecologist devoted to preserving wildlife.

sked to give a talk in a small town, he became an overnight celebrity and the deception spiralled out of control, with articles, "biographical" books, novels and world lecture tours, including an audience at Buckingham Palace. His neighbours in Saskatchewan Naoonal Park complained that he was a boorish

should have been ludicrous. But it was actually rather inspiring. His career was a phenomenal feat of "b.s.", as one former Mountie pul it, and he awakened worldwide interest in environmental issues. The hoax was exposed when he died of pneumonia, alcohol and overwork, but no one was that bothered. He dreamt big and the world dreamt with him.

Not like the poor creatures on

The Matchmaker (BBC1, Friday). All they want is a wealthy, professional, good-looking, selfreliant, lively, fun, committed partner over 5ft 6in, but under women's size 16, who will cherish them and be that very special person in their life.

You might think it would be easier to dress up in buckskin and attract a moose, but that doesn't stop them applying for member-ship of The Executive Club. This upmarket, elite, exclusive dating agency is for professionals only and strictly no riff-raff.

It was priceless. I can't remember when I last actually enjoyed watching a docusoap. Somewhere along the line the producer/director decided to allow Alun Jenkins, the agency's creator, to do his own narration. This would be a disaster with the professional "characters" in most of these series, but Alun is a very

He is specially oily, specially onceited, manipulative and conceited, unaware that he speaks enorely in aspirant lower middle-class cliches. He is also, at 5ft 31/sin, especially short and therefore especially ineligible to join his own suspect this is all a hoax and Alun was specially written for television by Alan Ayekbourn or Mike Leigh.

You are like finding a kingfisher with a broken wing," he tells Julie, 47 and getting a bit desperate. Go on, Alun. I bei you tell that to all the girls. (Later we discover that he does.) The first programme was rivetingly ghastly, but I have already seen next week's instalment and it gets much, much worse.

After the acclaim of Holding On and his striking adaptation of Great Expectations, the writer and gloom-monger Tony Marchant is back again with Bad Blood (ITV, Sunday). Desperate to adopt, a wealthy English doctor and his wife gn to Romania and find an orphan brought up in the forest, possibly by devil-worshippers. While there the doctor may have acquired a nasty virus and passed it unto one of his private patients in London.

It is an attempt at contemporary Gothic playing on our parantias about blood-borne diseases and our horrified Western guilt about Romanian orphanages. The characters names echo Bram Stoker's Dracula, and there are unconvincing Hammer horror stick-ons. Baleful waives pop up everywhere and the doctor gets dive-bombed by an ominous crow.

Yet it was insidiously gripping. Wasn't it the Bonzo Dog Doo Dah Band who sang "Bad blood is like an egg-stain on your tie; you can pick it, but it won't go away"? How right they were.

EU tax threat to eurobonds remains unresolved

By ROBERT LEA

THE City's trillion-pound eurobond industry is becoming increasingly edgy over its future, after a meeting of European finance ministers at the weekend closed with a conclusion to the thorny issue of withholding tax no nearer.

While Gordon Brown, the Chancellor, attempted to strike an upbeat note after the Ecofin meeting in Dresden, British officials admitted: "We are an extremely long way away from finding a working def-inition which would be acceptable

Mr Brown said after the meeting: "We have always said we will do everything to advance the eurobond market in the United Kingdom and that we will not agree to any directive that imposes a withholding tax on Britain. What is interesting in the last few weeks is that there is a growing understanding of the British position — that we are both determined and right in what we are doing."

Meanwhile, Mario Monti, the outgoing European Tax Commissioner, said: "The crucial new element was that many member states have said they are in favour of working towards a specific solution for eurobonds."

What is at issue is a draft EU directive on investments which would put a minimum 20 per cent tax on interest income on bank accounts or securines held within the EU by EU residents.

Such a tax would hobble the City of London as the pre-eminent market in eurobonds and would hit tens of thousands of jobs in the Square Mile. The business is likely to migrate rapidly to Switzerland.

The failure to announce any developments on the issue is already taking its toll of the market, according to Tim Dickenson, spokesman for the International Securities Market Association.

There are signs that investors are beginning to insist that [bond] issuers appoint paying agents that are outside of the EU," said Mr Dickenson. "The continued uncertainty means that it is highly likely that that trend will continue."

Having a paying agent — the bank through which the coupon, or interest, on a bond is paid - located offshore or in Switzerland could ensure that if the withholding tax directive comes in, those particular bonds would remain exempt.

City leaders are privately argu-ing that the lack of news out of Dresden is because there is a genuine impasse over a tax which on the one hand Britain and Luxemburg implacably oppose and which on the other hand could be riddled with loopholes if concessions are granted. After the Ecofin meeting, Luc Frieden, Luxembourg's Budget Minister, said: "There was no agreement within the Ecofin, either to exclude eurobonds or to affirm that there had been an agreement to exclude a certain number of eurobonds."

Treasury officials were unable to confirm what status the discussions on withholding tax would have at next month's Ecofin meeting.

City bets on counter-bid for Asda

By Sarah Cunningham, retail correspondent

CTTY investors who were busy late on Friday betting Kingfisher's agreed offer for Asda flushing out a high-er takeover bidder are likely to learn quickly whether they have bet wisely.

Asda's share price shot to 4 per cent above the value of kingfisher's all-share agreed offer on Friday on expectations of a counter-bid. Other potential bidders have been denotied as Wal-Mart of the US. Carrefour of France or Ahold of The Netherlands, but it is believed that they will have to come forward sooner rather than later.

Asda and Kingfisher publish the details of the deal, which they are billing as a merger, today and they hope to have it completed by the end Kingfisher insiders were irritated that the deal was being interpreted as Asda being sold on the cheap. Before Asda's price rose on Friday, and Kingfisher's fell, the deal offered a 12.2 per cent premium to Asda shareholders

"There had to be a premium because Asda's share price had been depressed by the Competition Commission referral linto trading in the whole supermarket sector]," said one insider.

"We had to agree terms that reflect the real value of Asda, so it could not be nil premium. But the idea is that Asda shareholders will be investing in the future growth of the enlarged

Kingfisher and Asda will today seek to persuade the City that the reasons for the merger are compelling. Growth would initially come from such changes as putting Asda's George-branded clothing into high street branches of Woolworth's, which is part of Kingfisher. Goods from other Kingfisher chains, such as Comet, B&Q and Superdrug will begin to be sold in branch-Sir Geoffrey Mulcahy, who will remain chief executive of Kinglisher, and Allan Leighton, who is chief executive of Asda and will be Sir Geoffrey's deputy, will also argue that the merged company would have better leverage with suppliers, which should lead to about £100 million of synergy benefits. Because there is little overlap, cost savings would be much less, at about £40 million to £60 million. The enlarged group's strong balance sheet and cashflow should allow Kinglisher to continue the expansion of its electrical and DIY arms in Europe. The deal could also allow Kingfisher to go further with its Big W out-of-town stores.

The stores, the first of which is to be opened soon near Edinburgh, are intended to be effectively very large branches of Woolworth's but which also sell goods from Cornet, B&Q and Superdrug.

Although the intention has been to put in adult clothing and fast food from outside companies. George clothing and Asda food could be incorporated to create the nearest thing in Britain to a Wal-Mart store. Wal-Mart's highly succesful formula has made it the largest retailer in the world.

In the longer run, Kingfisher would hope to export Big Wstyle stores to emerging mar-kets. Tesco. the UK market leader, is opening hypermar-kets in Eastern Europe, Thailand and South Korea. It is expected to open up in Malaysia and Taiwan soon. Wal-Mart and Carrefour, Ahold and a number of other continental ave also been busi ly opening hypermarkets in the Third World.

Designs on lifting fashion sales at Selfridges

By Sarah Cunningham

SELFRIDGES is attempting to boost sales of its designer clothing with a series of catwalk shows to be held this week at its London and Manchester stores. Models wearing the spring/ summer collections from Versace V/2, Virgin. Miu Miu. Clements Ribeiro. Joseph and Ronit Zilkha, among others. will be on parade.

Selfridges has said that sales at its Oxford Street store picked up sharply in Febru-ary and March. Like-for-like growth was up 6 per cent on a year earlier, and total sales growth was 13 per cent, includ-ing the reopening of some re-furbished areas of the store. Manchester, which opened for business at Trafford Park last year, was also reported to be trading well. Whether other retailers' efforts to spur trade after a dreadful winter season have begun to pay off should be-come evident on Thursday, when the official March retail sales figures are published. Indications for March from British Retail .Consortium sales data and the CBI distributive trades survey were positive.

On Tuesday, the retail price index figures for March are to be published. HSBC Securities thinks that retailers have been attempting to rebuild margins after cutting prices hard at the turn of the year in a desperate attempt to boost this is likely to be offset by the Bidding battle likely for First Choice

BY DOMINIC WALSH

FIRST CHOICE HOLIDAYS, which last month unveiled a £1.5 billion merger with Kuoni of Switzerland, could find itself at the centre of a bidding war involving Europe's biggest tour operators.

In recent days, speculation has been mounting that Airtours is preparing to gatecrash the Kuoni merger hy launching a hostile all-share counterbid worth 220p-230p a share.

However, there were indications last night that both Thomson Travel Group, the UK's market leader, and Preussag of Germany, which controls Thomas Cook, were considering how to block the expected move from David Crossland, the Airtours chairman. Preussag, which through Thomas Cook holds 14 per cent of First Choice, could launch a bid, although Thomson would face huge competition hurdles.

lan Clubb, First Choice chairman, yesterday cautioned: "It seems improbable to me that the major Airtours competitors would be happy to let David Crossland proceed without themselves considering bidding as well, and that's before taking account of the substantial regulatory issues." He said that a bid would represent a reckless gamble" for Mr Crossland as il would inevitably lead to a competition inquiry, weakening First Choice during its crucial sum-

WITH less than two weeks to go to enter the Entrepreneur of the Year competition, a pan-el of experts from The Times and Ernst & Young has adjudicated on who is the Entrepreneur of the Millennium. From Cosimo de Medici to Bill Gates, from Henry Ford to Richard Arkwright, 15 entrepreneurs in all were assessed. The winner is Li Ka-sbing. a Hong Kong serial entrepreneur and creator of three business empires. An entrepreneur with no advantage in life but his wits, be was born in a troubled China in 1928, arrived in Hong Kong at 11 and left school soon after. Making plastic toys won him fame. property speculation brought fortune. Status came with buy-ing two traditionally British-Kong Electric and Hutchison Whampoa, creator of Orange.

Mr Li is worth about £5 billion. Any one of his careers would make him a great entrepreneur. All three make him the greatest of the millennium. □ Entrepreneur of the Year: 0845 6041012 or www.eoy.co.uk
